HAPGOOD Says:

Famine in Russia May Upset Soviet Regime and Lead in Time to Return of Czarist Factions to Power.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD.

Staff Correspondent of Boston American

Washington, July 29. — With the deadly famine the politics of Russia enters upon a new phase. There is not much use in discussing the responsibility for the present situation.

NORMAN HAPGOOD

A large part of it belongs to the inefficiency and corruption of the government of the Tsars. Part of it belongs to the lack of imagination and courage of the Lvov governments. Much of it belongs to the exaggerated theories of the Bolsheviks.

A large part belongs to the foreign governments, particularly France, Poland, Japan and the United States, which have kept Russia at war and blockaded for years after other countries were beginning efforts at reconstruction.

AS TO U. S. CHARITY.

But it is more important to understand what is to come than to complain of the wickedness and error that have been. In that wickedness and error we have had a large share, but it concerns us now more to see whether our charity is to be used to load the dice in favor of reaction.

Opinion about what ought to happen in Russia can be divided into three parts, leaving out the views of Communists, which do not need to be argued.

First, there are the Restorationists, or Tzarists. These are not stronger than they have been at any time since the collapse of Wrangel. One of the men being groomed by them is the Grand Duke Paul, now eighteen years old, who is at present in Berlin. Another is Wrangel himself.

The famine seems likely to do to the Lenin government what its other enemies could not do, and the Tzarists are thoroughly organized to take advantage of any opening.

While Germany has been the favorite organizing point of the Tzarists they are by no means weak in this country. The activities in New York headed by Boris Brasol, Colonel Karpachnikov, and their American associates of the type of the Princess Cantacuzene, will be found on that side at the proper moment.

THE DEMOCRATIC GROUP.

The second group can be called democratic or constitutionalist. It is the group represented on the whole by the thirty-two in Paris, although there are avowed absolutists in that group. In this country it is represented by Mr. Bakhmeter and Mr. A. J. Sack.

The United States government is now preparing to spend some money directly on propaganda, in addition to what it spends indirectly through Mr. Sack. A long anti-Bolshevik report is at present being secretly printed in the government printing office.

It was prepared in England by a committee, headed by a very noble lord, for the purpose of exposing the Lloyd George trade policy. Senator Lodge, who is ferocious on the subject of Russia, is much pleased with it, and so is the State Department.

The third group consists of those who have tried to bring about peace and trade in Russia to pave the way for normal evolution. This group has been thwarted by the governments of France, Japan, Poland and the United States, but the most powerful of their opponents is the famine.

INTERVENTION MAY SUCCEED.

Although I belong emphatically to the third group, I do not put my head in the sand with intensely anti-Bolshevik Americans in Russia acting as rescuers; with France and Japan, and I fear Poland, still eager to make use of that situation; and with the American government full of the same political obsession I think the chances strong that political intervention this time may succeed.

What it will accomplish is another matter. Its camouflage will be a constituant assembly, the manner of whose selection will be determined in Paris. Before the famine is over, and industry going normally again, there is likely to be an essentially foreign government in Moscow.

The first one will not last long. There will be another and another, and another. The end will be a Tsar, either in name or in fact. By that time there is likely to be another war involving a good part of Europe and Asia.

The relief must be given. The situation is so desperate that there is no other course. But politics will find its way in and the price threatens to be terrific.

King Says Northcliffe Did Not Tell Truth

RUN ON 5-CT. SAVINGS BANK

WEST END RESIDENTS WITHDRAW DEPOSITS

"Institution as Good as Gold," Says Bank Commissioner Allen's Office

Following a rumor circulated in the West End to the effect that something was wrong at the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, a "run" was started by residents of that section today.

In a short time School street, as which this bank is located, was black with depositors, all striving to get into the draft department, to withdraw their deposits. The majority of the depositors in the crowd were women.

Up to noon thousands of dollars had been withdrawn and the rush of depositors was still on. Treasurer Joseph C. Holmes of the bank would not give an estimate as to how much money had been withdrawn, but stated that it would run into "thousands of dollars."

He stated that at noon the surplus of the bank was $4,000,000, and stated that the bank was ready to withstand any run that might be made.

P. D. Wallace, secretary to State Bank Commissioner Allen, when asked as to the standing of the bank stated:

"The Boston Five Cent Savings Bank is as good as gold. It is absolutely sound. Any run on that bank is absolutely unwarranted."

Bank officials stated that it was their opinion that the run was started by persons interested in one of the closed banks in the city with the motive or revenge or spite.

Very few of the depositors from sections other than the West End were included in the mass of men and women who pushed and shoved to get into the draft department. Many from the West End have withdrawn their savings.

Officials of the bank stated that efforts are being made by the bank to locate the source of the rumor that caused the "run." It was learned that it was spread only in the West End section and depositors stated that they had been told "there was something wrong at the bank." Any report of such a character, officials stated, was absolutely unfounded.

BACK BAY WOMAN SAVED FROM SUICIDE BY NURSE

Weary of life because of months of nervous exhaustion brought on by ill health, Miss Lydia H. Ludgen, forty-eight years old, attempted suicide today by locking herself in her apartment at No. 91 Norway street, Back Bay, and turning on three gas jets. The arrival a few minutes later of her trained nurse, Edith Barbank, who promptly opened the windows, turned off the gas, and summoned a police ambulance, saved the woman's life. She is now at City Hospital, where physicians say she will recover.

GIVEN SIX MONTHS FOR ATTACK ON LANDLADY

John Payson, fifty years old, of Claremont Park, was convicted of assault and sentenced to six months in the House of Correction by Judge Dowd in police court today. Mrs. Stanton-Jory, his landlady, testified that he had attempted to recover by force some silver plate he had given her as security for his board bill. Payson appealed and was held in $500 bail for a Superior Court hearing.

TUFTS AGAIN ON THE STAND

DENIAL IS ISSUED BY THE KING

Northcliffe Did Not Tell Truth in Statement on Ireland, Says George

By International News Service.

London, July 29.—King George today took a hand in the Northcliffe-Lloyd George controversy and denied Lord Northcliffe's statement in New York that he the King had said to the Premier: "You must stop killing my subjects."

King George's statement repudiating the accuracy of Lord Northcliffe's interview was contained in an authorized statement which Premier Lloyd George read in the House of Commons.

The statement read by the Premier follows:

"Statements have appeared in certain organs of the Irish and English press attributing words of great concern to the King relating to Irish policy.

"They appeared in an interview which Lord Northcliffe seems to have given out in the United States and which was sent to newspapers here.

"It is quite impossible choice to deal with columnist statements, but here they are of a very categorical character and they attribute a very serious statement to the sovereign calculated at the present moment to prejudice the chance of an Irish settlement. The statements have been circulated very freely, especially in Ireland."

A rumpus which has now assumed international ramifications has grown out of the hostility between Premier Lloyd George and Marquis Curzon, the foreign secretary, on the one hand, and Lord Northcliffe on the other.

A development which promises to increase the hostility was the cancellation of Lord Northcliffe's dinner at the British embassy in Washington.

The importance of this incident was shown by the fact that the Foreign Office today took official cognizance of it and issued a formal statement, saying that Marquis Curzon had nothing to do with the action of Sir Auckland Geddes, the British Ambassador in Washington.

Before this denial was issued friends of Lord Northcliffe had charged the Foreign Secretary with responsibility for the cancellation.

AMERICAN FIRM TO RESUME RUSSIAN TRADE

New York, July 28.—Direct trade relations with the Soviet government will be resumed Sunday, according to the American Producers Export Corporation, which today announced it would ship 2,000 tons of flour to Petrograd in the Norwegian steamer Storaker.

10 CT. MILK IN BOSTON POSSIBLE

Chairman Hultman Suggests Changes in Methods of Distribution

Ten-cent milk for Boston is possible through simplifying the method of distribution, in the opinion of Eugene C. Hultman, chairman of the State Commission on Necessaries of Life, as expressed today in a letter to the Boston City Council.

Incidentally Mr. Hultman points out that bottled milk is being sold to the public in Pittsfield at 7 cents a quart, while Nantucketians pay an average of fifteen cents.

In concluding his report to the City Council, Mr. Hultman says: "The commission believes that the city of Boston, through its health department cooperating with the distributors and producers, can probably simplify the method of distribution of this vital food for the inhabitants, with the result that the thrifty and needy householders will be able to obtain a supply of good, pure and health-sustaining milk for about ten cents per quart."

The report of Mr. Hultman follows:

"To the Honorable City Council of Boston:

"Your resolution of July 25, requesting information relative to the Boston milk situation, has been received and the Commission herewith transmits the following information gathered in its study and investigation of the production and distribution of this vital necessary of life.

"Boston receives about 90 per cent of its milk supply from sources outside of Massachusetts, viz., Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire, and even from Canada. The Massachusetts farmer is no longer a competitive factor in the Boston milk market. Through the New England Milk Producers' Association the farmers contract with local distributors on the basis of 'fresh' and 'surplus' milk.

ELEMENTS IN PRICE.

"The following comparative tables show the elements comprising the retail price of milk to the consumer in Boston.

RUTH PEMBER,
Alleged accomplice of "gentleman burglar," who robbed Cambridge flats. She was sentenced, but the case was not pressed by Tufts.

HOMELESS MAN HELD ON FALSE CHECK CHARGES

Willis T. Snyder, who told police he had three aliases but no home, was arrested today by operatives of the Pinkerton National Detective Agency, charged with uttering a false check and attempted larceny.

Snyder had an account for $100 at the Exchange Trust Company. Recently he deposited there a check for $117, drawn on a Providence bank, and a draft on a New York bank for $325. Police claim these notes were valueless. Snyder is said to be wanted by police in Los Angeles, Cal., and Salt Lake City, Utah.

GRILLED ON $7,500 'HOLDUP'

Flatly Denies Connection With International Service Co., Inc., Case

District Attorney Nathan A. Tufts of Middlesex, on trial before the Supreme Court for alleged malfeasance, went back on the witness stand today to submit to questioning as to the alleged $7,500 "hold-up" of officers of the International Service Company, Inc.

The Middlesex District Attorney made a complete denial of anything improper in connection with his part in the International Service Company matter.

He said:

That he did not threaten President James S. Adams or others of the concern when they called on him.

That he neither felt nor exhibited hostility toward them.

That he did not make any attempt to induce them to employ as counsel Attorney William J. Corcoran, whom Allen names as an alleged co-conspirator in the International Service Company affair.

FLAT CONTRADICTION.

District Attorney Tufts' testimony was in substance a flat contradiction of the testimony of the officers of the concern on all the important points.

He was forceful in denying he took part in any "hold-up" of the concern after its officers had violated banking laws or that he knew that there had been a hold-up.

Tufts, both in direct and cross-examination, said he not only had not seen William J. Corcoran in connection with the International Service Company affair, but he did not know that Corcoran was interested in that case.

Tufts went back on the stand after several hours had been devoted to the reading of the rest of the deposition of Mrs. Helen W. Segall, formerly wife of Captain Charles E. Stearns of Waltham, and to the testi-

Boston's famous east wind has at last brought relief from the torrid weather of the past few days.

Shortly after 9 o'clock today the wind shifted to the east and immediately the temperature started downward. At 9 o'clock the mercury touched 78, but by 10 o'clock it was down to 77 and at 11 o'clock it had dropped to 75, with indications pointing to still lower regions—provided the wind does not take another shift.

Unsettled weather, with possible local showers, was predicted for tonight and tomorrow, according to the official forecast. Not much change in temperature was promised along with light and variable winds.

The weather man was reticent about the prospects of the east wind continuing, however.

Little change was noted in the temperatures in other sections of the country. It is generally cloudy in the Middle and New England States, and high temperatures the rule. The coolest spot in New England was at Eastport, Me., where the temperature was 62 this morning.

BORROWED SUM WHILE SUIT FOR DIVORCE WAS PENDING

Both the judges appeared as Tufts' witnesses.

Mrs. Sewall, formerly Mrs. Stearns, testified that Daniel H. Coakley was to receive $5,000 for getting her divorce. The original arrangement was that he was to get one-third of any settlement Stearns made on her.

Telling the granting of his divorce, Mrs. Sewall said, Coakley loaned her $1,000 to live on.

She gave him promissory notes and paid him back the money when she got her alimony and paid his fee.

Out of the $5,000 Coakley got he spent $200 or $300 for private detectives and the rest.

DENIED "FRAMEUP."

Mrs. Sewall in cross examination, as before, flatly denied that she connived with Tufts to "frame up" her husband by having him in a compromising situation with a married woman "Miss Pennington."

She denied that Mr. Tufts with her divorce case, but he refused to take it. She gave him a $100 Liberty bond, which he returned to her when he declined to aid.

Mrs. Sewall slightly contradicted the testimony given by her friend, Mrs. Anne Eastman Brown, who had testified that on her husband and Mrs. Sewall she could fix up a case for her against her husband and suggested the employment of a "friend" to betray Stearns into a criminal situation.

Chief Justice Aiken was a strong witness for Tufts. He told of conference with Tufts in which the Middlesex district attorney complained of the crowded condition of the docket, which prevented him from trying many cases.

The chief justice said that in point of the activity of its district attorney he considered Middlesex County first.

$5,000 TO COAKLEY.

Attorney David Greer continued reading the deposition of Mrs. Sewall as soon as the court opened. It was made at her home in Glen Cove, N. Y., on July 7. It was cross-examination.

Q.—Where did you have your first interview with Tufts? A.—In his office at Waltham.

Q.—You say you gave him a $100 Liberty bond? A.—Yes. He later returned it to me.

Q.—Did you discover that there was a mortgage on the house at Waltham? A.—No.

Q.—How much did you pay Coakley as a fee? A.—$5,000.

Minus the expenses paid to the detectives? A.—Yes.

Q.—He agreed to take one-third of the settlement, didn't he? A.—Yes.

Q.—How much did he pay Mr. Bentley out of the $5,000? A.—Between $200 and $300.

Q.—Did he give you a receipt? A.—No, I signed a paper.

Q.—You say Coakley didn't give you a receipt? A.—He did not. I signed a release stating that I had paid so much for my fee and that back the money he had loaned me, which was $1,000, or text $1500 notes.

Q.—Why did you give you any money? A.—I had no money to live on from the time of the hearing the evidence to the time of the trial.

$500 FROM HUSBAND.

Q.—Did you know that you had received some money from your husband? A.—Yes, I received $500 besides this from my husband.

Q.—How did you get it? A.—It was sent in a check to H. Paul. It was signed by Mr. Fuller, my husband's lawyer.

Q.—Did you know your husband was trying to get a divorce from you on statutory grounds? A.—No.

Q.—Did you know your husband charged you with misconduct? A.—No.

Q.—Did Coakley tell you that your husband was going to file a counter suit for divorce? A.—No, I knew that he was trying to make some fuss, but I did not know what it was.

Q.—Did you know your husband was going to name your present husband as co-respondent? A.—No.

Q.—You never heard that from anybody? A.—From nobody.

Q.—Did you talk with Mr. Fuller? A.—No.

Q.—Did he see you? A.—Not until the trial.

Q.—Did you try to get someone else to go to see Tufts' office to see him? A.—Yes, I tried to get a Mrs. Holland, who lived in Boston. She was unable to come.

WANTED DIVORCE.

Q.—Whom did you take in her place? A.—Mrs. Anne Brown.

Q.—Did you live with Mrs. Brown? A.—Yes.

Q.—But you took your meals at a hotel, did you not? A.—No, I took them with Mrs. Brown.

Q.—There was a hotel in Newton-ville, was there not? A.—Yes. The Chamberlain. Witness added that it has since burned down.

Q.—You knew Tufts would have to prosecute any misconduct on the part of your husband in Middlesex County. A.—No.

Q.—You didn't know it at all? A.—Not until he told me that he wouldn't take the case.

Q.—You wanted to get a divorce on statutory grounds, didn't you? A.—On any grounds that I could.

Q.—Did you show Tufts the schedule of securities when you saw him in Cambridge? No, I never showed it to him.

Witness denied that she ever showed Tufts her father-in-law's will. She said the will was in a trunk at Mrs. Brown's, and she did not take it out until she took it to show to Coakley. She denied that she ever sent any letters to St. Paul to be remailed there, bearing the St. Paul postmark.

Mrs. Sewall said that she went to St. Paul the latter part of May, 1918, and returned a few days later in response to a telegram from Coakley's office.

RESUME STEARNS' TESTIMONY.

Attorney Greer finished the reading of the Sewall affidavit after Judge Cox was seated.

Cross-examination by Attorney Hurlburt showed that istrict Attorney Tufts told her he could not handle her case because he was district attorney and might be compelled to prosecute her husband on a statutory charge. This Mrs. Sewall did not understand.

She was asked if she knew a Miss Pennington or a Miss Shaw. She said both names appeared in the detectives' report shown to her by Daniel H. Coakley, but she never had seen the women, and did not know them, she said.

Asked if she knew their first names she said that she recalled the first name of one of them was mentioned in the detectives' report. She couldn't remember it. She said that she had discussed with Mrs. Anne Eastman Brown what she read in the detectives' report. She told Mrs. Brown how they had "caught Charles with a young woman in Cambridge."

Q.—Was Mr. Shirley who called while you were in Tufts' office a Waltham man? A.—No.

Q.—And you did not want to see him because you were afraid he might talk? A.—No, he was quite a talker.

Q.—Who was it Tufts sent in to inquire about the mortgage on your house? A.—A messenger boy.

SIGNED PAPER.

Q.—Did you sign a receipt in Coakley's office? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you sign a paper in a suit for divorce on statutory grounds? A.—Yes.

Q.—What became of that paper? A.—Coakley kept it.

Q.—That was never used, was it? A.—No.

Q.—Why was it dropped? A.—Because I first learned that my husband was going to fight the divorce, and then we learned that he wasn't and a suit was brought for cruel and abusive treatment.

Attorney Rooney in re-direct showed that Mrs. Brown had been living with Mrs. Sewall's mother in Waltham during Mrs. Sewall's absence in Virginia and that when Mrs. Sewall died, Mrs. Stearns wanted to return. Mrs. Brown was not ready to vacate.

This resulted in bad feeling, Attorney Rooney tried to show.

Q.—Was Mrs. Brown a literary woman who wrote fairy stories?

A.—She probably became and would take a fairy story and write a romance from it and produce it.

Q.—Did you think she was that way? A.—She supported herself that way.

Q.—Was she a commonplace woman not a woman of imagination and creativability?

SAME HANDWRITING.

A.—She was highly strung and temperamental.

Q.—Was she what you would call nervous? A.—Yes.

Tufts Recalled on International Service Case

In cross-examination by Allen, Garland admitted it might have been Wilcox who said the witness was a close friend of Tufts and had worked for him in his campaign.

Q.—You know of him as a square man? A.—Yes.

Q.—And you know that it took a good, square man to take that office?

Question objected to by Hurlburt. There was some laughter.

Johnson could not recall take up the case of the International Service Company, Inc., District Attorney Tufts was recalled to the stand.

Q.—Who first called your attention to the International Service Company? A.—Mr. Rogers of Lowell.

Q.—Did you later request an attorney of Lowell to investigate the case? A.—Yes, Mr. O'Neil.

Q.—Along in June O'Neil came to Cambridge, did he? A.—Yes.

Q.—And when you got Quella report you asked Captain Gordon to investigate? A.—Yes.

Q.—Were you at that time informed of any complaints against the company? A.—No.

RECEIVED COMPLAINTS.

Q.—Were O'Neil or Gordon aware said there was some talk in Lowell and that Mr. Swain, a Lowell newspaper in Lowell was running a story every Sunday about the I. V. Greene Company. He also said that he was getting money in on the theory that Swain is being or did a handling business.

Q.—After this did you have a talk with Gordon? A.—Yes.

Q.—What was said? A.—He said he had talked with O'Neil and with the people in Boston. That the man with whom he talked, I think, was Mr. Allen. He was very investigatory and seemed to be loath to give him any information. He said he had told him to come to my office and I told him to see Mr. Wagner to whom I turned over the case.

Q.—In the first week in June did any of these people come to see you? A.—Yes. Levenson came first and I referred him to Wagner. He said he had told him to come to my office and I told him to see Mr. Wagner to whom I turned over the case.

Q.—In the first week in June did any of these people come to see you? A.—Yes. Levenson came first and I referred him to Wagner. He said that Wagner was out and that he had several men with him who wanted to see me. He said the name the man Athans began to speak first. He was interrupted, the door was opened and in a moment everybody was talking at once. I rapped for order. Then Athans spoke. He said something about having been in service and being married and had trouble would hurt him. He said he had a report which was contrary to what I had heard, and I showed him a circular. He said he didn't know what my agents are doing.

DIDN'T SHAKE FIST.

Q.—Did you shake your fist? A.—No, of course not.

Q.—When you called them to order what motion did you make? A.—I rapped. (Witness demonstrated.)

Q.—Did you make any hostile demonstration. A.—No.

Q.—Had you known any of them before? A.—No.

Q.—Did you have any feeling of hostility towards them? A.—No.

Q.—Did you make any attempt to induce them to have Corcoran as an attorney? A.—No.

Q.—Had you been informed that Lemuel Peters was their attorney? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you know that they had any other attorney up to that time than Lemuel Peters? A.—No.

Q.—Do you know Lemuel Peters to be a respectable member of the bar? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you say anything about bringing in Corcoran before the Grand Jury in this conversation? A.—No.

Q.—Wanyour wife waiting for you downstairs at this time? A.—My father-in-law was, perhaps she was.

Q.—Did you find out from Wagner that Corcoran was in the case? A.—I couldn't say. We discussed forty or fifty cases every day.

Q.—Did you recall Levenson telling you that Corcoran was in the case? A.—No.

Q.—This O'Neil who represented your office, did you pay his fees? A.—He sent a bill, but it was not paid.

Q.—How much? A.—It was some time ago, and I was too busy with other matters to have it paid. I take up the matter.

Q.—Where did you employ him? A.—The latter part of May, 1920.

Q.—How long did that employment last? A.—It made the report in May of this year.

Q.—Have you this report? A.—Yes. Johnson showed it to Allen and the latter said he would read it during recess.

Q.—This O'neil is the same lawyer that appeared in the Lowell misdemeanors case? A.—He was one of them.

NO COMPLAINTS.

Q.—Did O'Neil furnish you in his report any specific complaints against the International Service Company? A.—I haven't read the report.

Q.—Was any mention made of the matter did you know of a single instance of complaint against International Service Company? A.—None had come to me specifically.

Chief Justice Aiken Defends Tufts' Acts

Chief Justice John A. Aiken of the Superior Court was one of the first witnesses. He stated that he had frequent talks with Tufts concerning the conditions which the court found in Middlesex and that Tufts was very anxious to his job for reform. The chief justice continued that Tufts had tried to improve bail conditions and had filed a bill in the Legislature.

Chief Justice Aiken said he considered that Middlesex County, in point of activity of its district attorney's office, is the very first place.

Q.—How long have you been a justice of the superior court? A.—Let me see. Since 1898.

Q.—How long have you been chief justice? A.—About half and half.

Q.—Did District Attorney Tufts complain to you concerning the congested condition of the criminal docket of the Middlesex County?

Attorney Hurlburt—"I object."

Chief Justice Rugg—"The witness may answer."

A.—He did.

Q.—How long have you been chief Justice? A.—About half and half.

Q.—Did District Attorney Tufts complain to you concerning the congested condition of the criminal docket of the Middlesex County?

Attorney Hurlburt—"I object."

Chief Justice Rugg—"The witness may answer."

A.—He did.

Q.—How did he say?

Hurlburt—"I object."

Chief Justice Rugg—"The question may be answered."

TALKS WERE EARNEST.

A.—He would talk with me on the point. He would complain about the congested conditions and would give figures to show the number of cases on the list. He wanted to know what could be done to relieve conditions. His talks were earnest.

Attorney Hurlburt again objected to the word "earnest." Chief Justice Aiken said "I beg your pardon." The answer was allowed to stand.

Q.—Were these talks frequent? A.—They were.

Q.—How many times did Tufts have such talks with you? A.—Seven or eight times a year, possibly. Possibly five or six.

Q.—Did he ever discuss the matter of bail with you? A.—Yes.

Q.—On how many occasions did he discuss bail? A.—Three or four.

Q.—What did he say? A.—He disapproved of the management of six bail commissioners. He complained that the securities taken were not adequate. May I go further?

Attorney Johnson.—"I think not. That covers what I wish to know."

Q.—Do you recall Tufts discussing with you a bill which he filed with the Legislature? A.—Yes. I told him I thought he ought to wait to see if the court couldn't make improvements and give him more time before he went to the Legislature.

FILING OF CASES.

Q.—Did he finally enter a bill with the Legislature? A.—Yes, in 1919. I acquiesced in that measure.

Attorney Johnson.—"I trust that the court will take judicial notice that this bill was passed by the Legislature."

Q.—Now, Mr. Chief Justice, I would like to ask you what the custom is as to the filing of cases in criminal courts without a plea of guilty having first been given? What have you got to say on that matter?

Attorney Hurlburt.—"I object."

Attorney Johnson.—"I am putting this question because Chief Justice Rugg put to Judge Dubuque."

Chief Justice Rugg.—"I think the question which the court put was related to the filing of cases when neither a plea or a default had been entered."

Attorney Johnson.—"Will you answer the question as the court had put it?"

A.—I should say that it has been done. My recollection is that it has happened from time to time.

Q.—Can you cite any particular class of cases in which it has been done?

A.—Not that I can remember. As I recall it, it is usually done when witnesses are absent or when it is apparent that it would be impossible to devote time to get further evidence.

NO MALFEASANCE.

Q.—As I understand it, you have not at much in the criminal business in Middlesex County? A.—No. Last December I presided at the criminal session during the illness of one of the justices.

Q.—Have you had an opportunity to observe Tufts' conduct in office? A.—Very little.

Q.—Do you know of any malfeasance or misfeasance on his part? A.—No.

He was taken for cross examination by Hurlburt.

Q.—The crowded condition of the criminal docket exists generally in all counties? A.—Yes, excepting in the smaller counties.

Q.—You have assigned justices to hold special sessions in Middlesex? A.—Yes, but I cannot recall how many.

Q.—When you were district attorney did you file cases in which pleas of guilty or defaults had not been entered? A.—I cannot recall. I was in a small county.

Q.—If a case is filed without such entries there is nothing to hold a defendant on, is it not? A.—Yes.

Q.—Is that was your practise in this respect? A.—I cannot recall.

Chief Justice Aiken was taken in custody.

Q.—What counties have the most congested criminal dockets? A.—Would say Essex, Suffolk and Norfolk, and perhaps Hampden.

Q.—What do you say as to Middlesex? A.—As to the activity of the district attorney, I should put it first first.

case? A.—I was told it was a Watch and Ward case.

Attorney Johnson brought up the case of James H. Ellis of Lowell, charged with a violation of auto laws. Attorney - General Allen charges that the case was adjudged and that no sore facies were brought against the surety or sureties.

Q.—What do you remember about the case? A.—When the case was called for trial for the defendant told me that the defendant was sick. Someone else said he was sick. The case was left pending affidavits concerning the defendant's physical condition. The superintendent was required to find out when the defendant would be able to appear.

Attorney Johnson took the case of Maurice Bashey of Lexington, who was charged with operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor. Attorney General Allen charges that Tufts withheld evidence in this case and neglected to take such evidence before the court.

PEMBER CASE.

Q.—What do you remember about the case? A.—I remember that Bashey was found guilty and was previously indicted. He was a man who had served in the navy, gone abroad and it was stated that the case had nothing but his plea of guilty to show that he had been operating a machine. I accepted a plea of guilty.

Attorney Johnson brought up the case of Rose Pember.

Ruth Pember or Pender was arrested in Hartford early this year, it being charged that she was trying to dispose of goods stolen from Cambridge department houses as a "gentleman burglars." The girl, who is twenty-two years old, denied that she had any accomplices. Later she was sentenced to the reformatory by Judge Cox. She pleaded guilty and escaped punishment. Allen alleges that he opposed the case from improper motives.

Q.—What do you remember about the case? A.—Only, as I recall it, the girl, wished to put in a plea of nolo. I said I would not accept such a plea. He said there was no evidence in the case. I told him that in that event I would not accept such a plea. He would then have to enter a plea of guilty. Later he pleaded guilty.

Q.—During this year, since the first of January, there have been four murder cases, and one case of assault with intent to kill on the docket? A.—There have been three capital trials and of assault with intent to kill.

MANTHER CASE AGAIN.

Attorney-General Allen took Judge Cox for cross examination.

Q.—Did you observe any suggestion of a quarrel between the officer and the district attorney (in the Pember case)? A.—No.

Q.—Have any case come before you on an indictment or on an appeal from the lower court? A.—I do not remember.

Q.—Did you know of any conviction in the lower court, except evidence? A.—No. I only knew that she was a friend of that burglar who by him to creameries, condensaries, butter and cheese manufacturers, at a price which nets the farmer about one-half the amount he receives for the fresh product. This lowers the average price which the farmer receives for his total output to a very low figure, when the surplus milk is not absorbed by the consumer.

"According to the reports of the United States Bureau of Markets, the stocks of condensed and evaporated milk continue to pile up in this country, in spite of the increased domestic demand for it occasioned by the high price of the fresh product. New York City has met the problem of the high retail price of this essential food by a method of distribution which results in a material saving to the people of that city. We are advised by the Health Commissioner of New York that practically 40 per cent of all the milk sold in that city at retail is in bulk at a cost of 10c per quart to the householder.

"From a comparison of the vital statistics of New York and Boston it appears that the infant mortality rate, child mortality under 5 years of age rate, as well as the death rate for communicable diseases traceable to milk are higher in Boston than in New York, as follows:

Death rate under one year per 1,000 live births.

	1916	1917	1918	1919	1920
Boston	106.9	99.0	113.5	94.8	100.7
New York	90.0	86.4	97.3	82.9	85.0

Death rate under five years for 1,000 general population.

	1916	1917	1918	1919	1920
Boston	4.08	3.81	4.37	3.65	3.88
New York	3.76	3.58	3.84	3.42	3.60

Average death rate for five communicable diseases per 100,000 population.

	1916	1917	1918	1919	1920
Boston	37.6	36.0	39.1	32.8	34.9
New York	37.2	35.6	39.9	32.4	37.9

The commission is made up of medical health experts, but we have been advised that the lower price of milk has allowed greater milk consumption by children. This strengthens their physical condition and raises their power of resistance to disease.

"We are attaching tables of comparative prices of milk in various cities. You will note from these tables that bottled milk delivered to the consumer is being sold at prices varying from 10 to 14 cents per quart in the principal cities of the East and middle west and for from 12 cents to 14 cents in communities of this Commonwealth. You will also note that in one municipality in this Commonwealth, Taunton, the price of milk is as low as 7 cents per quart.

The retail price per quart for bottled milk delivered to the consumer in representative towns and cities in Massachusetts follows:

Amesbury	10-14
Boston	12

Q.—Did you get any recommendation from Judge Weeks (the Marlboro lower court judge who first tried Manther for keeping a gaming nuisance)? A.—Not that I remember.

Q.—It was brought to your attention that Judge Weeks and Mr. Chase said that this man was being protected by the chief of police? A.—No.

Q.—Did you know this man had been found with a boy's gold watch which he had given to a girl at home from high school and that the children of Marlboro were being corrupted by this man? A.—No.

Q.—You were district attorney in Essex County? A.—Yes, and am familiar with the duties of the post? A.—I tried to perform my duties. I don't know whether I qualified to that extent or not.

Q.—You can call Attorney Hurlburt's attention to anything in respect to the way cases were being presented in Middlesex County? A.—Yes. I recall multiple cases were being presented instead of a single indictment in several cases. I also spoke to one of the assistant district attorneys about it.

VETERAN FELLS PARKER HILL OFFICIAL

S. L. Jones of Vocational Training Bureau Knocked Unconscious

There was uproar at the Parker Hill Hospital when a former servos man who recently arrived there from Washington swung on S. L. Jones of the Federal Board of Vocational Training, knocked him unconscious and inflicted a big gash in his forehead.

Mr. Jones, who is in charge of vocational training at the hospital, was explaining to the disabled required to obtain and fill out certain necessary forms, officials say, when the man became angered. Finally the patient is alleged to have seized Jones and told him to get out.

Jones, it is said, walked away. According to hospital officials he then crept up behind Jones, seized him by the arm, swung him around and crashed his fist into Jones' forehead. Jones went down unconscious with a stream of blood flowing from the forehead.

Patients and attendants rushed over and the man is alleged to have delivered the blow disappeared. He has left the hospital, officials say, and has not been located.

Hospital physicians treated the injured man. Three stitches were required in his forehead to close the gash.

According to the officials a board of two medical officers will sit on the case.

GIRL'S FATHER SUES PRINCIPAL OF PROVIDENCE SCHOOL FOR $5,000

EDUCATION HAMPERED, IS CLAIM

Providence, July 29.—A damage suit asking $5,000 from Harry A. Jager, principal of the Vineyard street grammar school, for his alleged refusal to allow Ann Hagan to transfer her work from his school to another one has been filed here in Superior Court by the girl's father, James H. Hagan.

Hagan in his petition declares that the principal's refusal to allow his daughter to leave the Vineyard street school and enter the Henry Barnard school constitutes a "malicious interference" with the girl's education.

According to the petition, Principal Jager signed a card transferring Miss Hagan to the other school and later rescinded his action. As a result of this attitude, Hagan says, he was obliged to send his daughter to Elmhurst Academy, a parochial school. Jager's alleged interference, Hagan asserts, constitutes an obstacle that has prevented Hagan's carrying out his "contract" with the city of Providence for the education of his daughter.

Jager refused to comment on the affair further than to declare there was "nothing to it." He is represented by the city solicitor.

On one occasion, Hagan asserts, his daughter absented herself from a school period to take a music lesson. On the day following, he says, Jager threatened criminal prosecution, and declared he would treat her "like a lot of the dirty wops and send her to the reform school."

WASTE CAUSES HUGE LOSS IN METAL TRADES

New York, July 29.—A billion dollars a year is lost in the metal trades industry owing to idle men and machinery, according to a report of the Hoover committee on elimination of waste in industry of the American engineering council issued today.

The metal trades industry is operating as a whole at only about sixty per cent. of normal output, the report states. It is the largest manufacturing industry in the United States and gives employment to two million workers. The value of increased possible production even in normal times would be over $20,000,000.

Instability of labor employment and faulty management are given as the major causes of waste and non-production.

The average yearly waste due to avoidable labor turn-overs is about $100,000,000, according to the committee.

FIRES SWEEP TIMBER LANDS OF MAINE

Augusta, Me., July 29.—Pulp wood and camps and thousands of acres of valuable timberlands were destroyed in seven forest fires which were reported by the Maine forestry district.

The most extensive blaze was in Benedicta, Aroostook county, where 100 volunteers battled with a stubborn fire that swept an area of two miles long and three-quarters of a mile wide, threatening the village of Silver Ridge.

The other fires were reported from Indian township, Codyville plantation and township No. 27, in Washington county; in the vicinity of Sherman, in Aroostook county and in township No. 23, Hancock county.

Relief was afforded by thunder showers, which were general and heavy throughout the State.

Doctor Explains How Jellyfish "Bite" Is Caused

The jellyfish "bite." What is it? Is it dangerous? What are the symptoms of its victims?

These questions were answered today by Dr. C. P. Sylvester of Allerton, who has treated scores of persons "bitten" by jellyfish at Nantasket. He describes the "sting" as "an anaphylactic reaction due to the entrance in the pores of jellyfish protein."

The poisoning is only temporary, he explains, and while extremely irritating, is not serious.

"The irritation comes in the form of a red rash on any part of the body where the fish touches," he explains. "It is a temporary poisoning of the skin caused by the absorption of the protein of a foreign species.

"Its effect, accompanied by deep red rash and intense irritation, may last a few minutes or sometimes a few hours. It has no serious after effects, and but for the pain is of no consequence."

WOMEN FIGURE IN SPURGIN'S AFFAIRS

Detectives Trail Two Blondes and Brunette, Friends of Missing Banker

Chicago, July 29.—The discovery of three women—two blondes and a brunette—and the uncovering of a $450,000 leather speculation were the chief features today in the investigation of the affairs of Warren C. Spurgin, who disappeared from Chicago's financial world with nearly a million dollars of the funds of the Michigan Avenue Trust Company.

The three women are said by detectives to have played a large part in the life of the former bank president. One of the blondes is alleged to have received $10,000 worth of stock in a producing oil company in exchange for a series of endearing letters.

A pretty Chicago divorcee who figured in the night life of the North Shore is another of the women. She and the recipient of the oil stock are both under police surveillance.

The other blonde has disappeared and the police are on her trail. For some time before her disappearance she is said to have lived at a fashionable South Side hotel where, without any visible means of support, she supported herself, a Pomeranian dog and a limousine.

The former bank president is believed to now be in Vera Cruz awaiting a steamer to take him to Honduras, the defaulter's haven.

The discovery of $450,000 leather speculation may add somewhat to the assets of the banker, it was said. The leather was found in a local warehouse.

It was also reported that an apparent attempt to tunnel into the defunct bank building had been discovered. A hole six feet square and four feet deep was found just outside the

'FRAT' DANCES MUST END AT 11:30 P. M. SAYS COURT

Washington, July 29.—Festivities at the Delta Tau Delta fraternity of George Washington University were dealt a terrific blow when Justice Hoehling in the District of Columbia Supreme Court ordered that they should stop at 11:30 p. m. The fraternity house is located in the fashionable residential section of Washington, and complaint was made by Mrs. Alexander McDonald Lee. She said she and her family were annoyed by "rough house" performance in the fraternity house.

JELLY-FISH WITH STING KEEPS OUT BATHERS

Nantasket Crowds Swelter on Sand Rather Than Brave Surf

Crowds sweltered in the hot sands at Nantasket today while a herd of "ferocious" stinging jelly-fish held undisputed sway in the surf.

Not a single bather entered the water. The jelly-fish had the crowds completely cowed.

Many persons swarmed the sands to look on and see for themselves the "bloodthirsty fish" in its native haunts, but no one was brave enough to fling defiance in the faces of the jelly-fish and take a plunge in the surf.

Meanwhile doctors in the vicinity had their hands full treating bathers who have been poisoned by contact with the fish during the past few days. According to Dr. Walter H. Sturgis, there is but one known remedy for the pain raised by the fish—thorough and frequent cleansing of the affected parts with cool water.

NOT NEAR BATH HOUSE.

The Metropolitan Park officials announced that the beach in the vicinity of the Nantasket State Bath House had not yet been infested. If it is warning will be given and the bath house closed.

Professor H. H. Daggett of State University of North Carolina, who with his family, is at 36 Q street, Hull, was affected by a jelly fish on his left leg. Dr. C. P. Sylvester treated Professor Daggett and his four-year-old daughter, Jane.

James A. Haley, nine years old, and his brother, Charles, seven years, sons of James A. Haley of East Braintree, suffered from the "sting" for four hours.

RARE IN LOCAL WATERS.

The poison fish is one which is rarely seen in local waters, although it is peculiar to the New England and North Atlantic coast. It is commonly called the red or pink jellyfish, but in reality the great Cyanea Arctica or "blue jelly."

It has a red or purplish heart and its many tentacles are entirely pink or red varying to blue. It attains a size of from two to three feet in diameter and has long streamers or tentacles which have been known to extend a distance of 100 feet from the main body, although the average length is much smaller.

These tentacles are filled with stinging or "lasso" cells which are poisonous.

According to Dr. Walter H. Sturgis of the Hull Life Saving Station and head of the Sturgis Hospital the bathers come in contact with the fish without knowing it. The merest touch is sufficient to impart the poison and the irritation begins immediately the bather leaves the water.

It was first noticed yesterday about 11 o'clock in the morning when bathers began to complain. The complaints grew and grew until hundreds were affected.

FIRST IN TEN YEARS.

This is the first time in ten years that the poisonous fish have been noticed in these waters. No one knows what brings them or how long they will stay.

Dr. Sturgis, who has made a study of water conditions at Nantasket believes they will be gone within three days at the outside.

There have been no complaints as yet from other beaches.

Dorothea F. Kenney, five years old, of No. 733 Nantasket avenue, Bayside, was bathing at Bayside when a huge jelly fish wrapped itself around her back. The child screamed and was taken from the water and brought home. She suffered from the effects for over ten hours.

Margaret, ten years; Virginia, twelve years, and Paul, nine years, children of Antonio Taurani of K street, were early victims of the "stinging" and were treated by a physician. They were "stung" on the legs while in bathing at Bayside.

A. H. Coan, Boston insurance broker, summering at No. 26 Quincy, and Carl Jackson of the same address were also victims and used quarts of lotion to secure relief.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Brightman of Watertown, summering at Q street, Bayside, were so badly "stung" that both were forced to take to their beds.

Another young woman to feel the jelly fish "sting" was Miss Lillian Spoffard of No. 792 Nantasket avenue, Nantasket.

WOMAN DIVORCED YEAR AND DIDN'T KNOW IT

Woman who brought suit for non-support at Quincy only to learn that her husband had obtained a divorce at Providence one year ago.

Mrs. Marion Holmes and her four-year-old son, Charles. Mrs. Holmes declares that her former mate begged her to remarry him, but she declined.

THROWS AWAY WEDDING RING AT NEWS

Mrs. Holmes of Braintree Declares She Is Glad to Be Free Again

Divorced for a year, yet totally unaware of it, until confronted with the papers in the district court while suing her husband for non-support, Mrs. Marion Holmes, No. 3 Shepard road, Braintree, sugged her beautiful four-year-old boy to her heart and declared that she was glad to be free again.

"I returned from the district court in a daze Tuesday. I was so shocked to think that Jack had gotten a divorce in Providence and no notice had been sent to me. But I was glad —so glad.

"I took my wedding ring which had been on my hand in the nine years I have suffered and worried as the wife of Jack Holmes, and I threw it from me. My baby, Charles and I then drove in the little old car to the beach for a swim. I was going to forget all the hideousness of my married life. For it has been hell to me."

Bit by bit, the woman who was kept in ignorance of her husband's divorce for over a year, unfolded a tale of deserting, pleadings for forgiveness, heart breaking anxieties, loneliness, and even want, all of which had wrung her heart and tested her love to the utmost.

"If ever a woman loved a man with her whole heart and soul, I am that woman and Jack is the man," said Mrs. Holmes. "We were married in 1912. For six months I was supremely happy, although I was only living in a small room in a hotel in Providence. Suddenly he disappeared and I was left without a cent to pay even my room rent. I heard from him four months later.

"He pleaded with me to forgive him saying that he was cursed with a 'gypsy heel' and when the call came to move on he could never resist. I forgave him as I did many, many times later. And I grew accustomed to the fact that we would live in furnished rooms and that I was to work and help the family income. Jack is an electrician and earns good money, but he also loves to spend it.

"Perhaps the most bitter pill to swallow in this whole affair, was Jack's unheralded departure from the little boy was born. He stayed away for eight months that time and if it hadn't been for my sister I would have been forced to ask help or aid from someone.

"Perhaps the most humorous thing," continued Mrs. Holmes, "is the fact that Jack wants me to remarry him. Yes, truly," she laughed.

"When the officers brought my husband to Braintree from Providence where he is working for the Percival Electric Company, he met me Monday and begged me to forgive him.

"He says that he wants to be taken back. I only hope the divorce is found to be legal. For after nine years, I'm through."

SPECIAL POLICE MAY HANDLE STRIKE

New Hampshire Governor Said to Plan Sending Police to North Walpole

Bellows Falls, Vt., July 29.—Plans of Governor Brown of New Hampshire for coping with the strike situation in North Walpole, just across the river, leaked out here today.

It was asserted, and not denied by company and town officials, that the latest contemplated move in the industrial war that started here last May is to form a special corps of police, recruited from a number of New Hampshire towns, and send them to North Walpole under command of Chief of Police Haley of Manchester.

Chief Haley has been in North Walpole today getting the ground, although he refused to make any comments on the reports of his mission.

After hearing protests from residents of North Walpole against the proposal for sending troops there, he issued instructions that tentage and other equipment placed in the wood yards of the Champlain Realty Company, a subsidiary of the International Paper Company, be removed at once.

If troops are sent to North Walpole, it was declared today, it will not be until the plan of Governor Brown for utilizing a special police guard has been given a thorough try-out.

NAVY YARD TO GET BID ON LEVIATHAN

If the U. S. Shipping Board decides to have the giant liner Leviathan reconditioned it will give the Charlestown Navy Yard an opportunity to bid for the work. Word to this effect has been received from Chairman A. D. Lasker of the Shipping Board. Much pressure has been brought on the authorities at Washington to have the work done here, as it would help greatly in keeping the 4,200 men now at the yard employed.

GIRL DRAGGED FROM STREET AND ROBBED

Elsie Norling, 15 Years Old, Accuses Negro of Attack

Thomas Murray, colored, was arrested by Police Inspector Cronin today after fifteen-year-old Elsie Norling of Gloucester identified him as the man who, she says, attacked and robbed her as she was passing down Dartmouth Place on her way to the Swedish Temple.

Miss Norling, who has been in this country from Sweden only a few months, told her story to the inspector in halting, broken English, while livid bruises on her neck and face verified her tale of brutal treatment.

Murray, a stocky, muscular negro, attacked her from behind as she was walking down the street, she told the inspector, and dragged her into his home in Dartmouth place.

LOCKED IN BEDROOM.

Here he locked her in a bedroom, she declared, and she was rescued only after another negro heard her cries of fear and pain and came to her relief.

She charges Murray took $12 from her purse after he had attacked her.

After being released from the negro's home the girl went to Deacon Hermann Lordran, of the Swedish Baptist Church, and told her story. He took her to Inspector Cronin.

Murray was arraigned in police court later in the day on charges of robbery.

NEGRO DENIES GUILT.

Murray, when arraigned before Judge Dowd, entered a plea of not guilty. He was held for trial on August 5 in bail of $2,000. Inspector Cronin told Judge Dowd that the girl would have to be cared for until the trial by the probation society.

Olaf Norling, of Gloucester, the girl's brother, told Cronin that she had until recently been working at the Ocean View Hotel, Pigeon Cove. Desiring to work in Boston, he said, she had communicated her wish to a colored woman working at the hotel. This woman is said to have advised her to go to Murray's home and see him.

It is believed that the woman said to be a relative of Murray's, will be arrested shortly.

HOLD CHAUFFEUR FOR KIDNAPING MAINE BOY

Charged With Stealing Child From Foster-Mother to Avenge Spurned Love

Bangor, Me., July 29.—Theodore Martin, thirty-five years old, is a prisoner in the county jail, charged with having kidnaped Donald Savoy, six years old, at Brewer Lake, Orrington, where the child has been living with his foster mother, Mrs. Savoy, and giving him into the hands of his mother, who is now Mrs. Joseph S. Peter of Orono.

In Municipal Court Martin was held in $2,000 for the September term of the Superior Court and in default of bail committed to jail. The court room was crowded by relatives and friends of the several families concerned and a great deal of testimony was introduced to the effect that Martin planned and executed the kidnaping.

Testimony tended to show that Martin represented to Mrs. Joseph St. Peter of Orono, mother of the boy, that the child was cruelly treated by Mrs. Mary Savoy of Brewer Lake, to whom he was given in adoption when he was four months old, that he was worked hard and fed on raw vegetables. All of this she has denied, saying that he had been kindly treated by Mrs. Savoy and that he wanted to remain with her.

Martin's motive is alleged to have been a desire to revenge himself upon Mrs. Savoy, for whom he had worked as chauffeur and for whom it is charged, he entertained sentimental regards. Recently Mrs. Savoy discouraged Martin, giving him a new suit of clothes and ordering him away from her house. At that time, it was testified, he swore to be revenged if it took him twenty years. The boy has been returned to Mrs. Savoy.

NEW ENGLAND GETTING MORE HARD COAL

Shipments of First Half of Year Exceed Those of 1920 by One Million Tons

During the first six months of this year New England received 1,000,000 more tons of hard coal and 1,000,000 tons less of soft coal than last year, according to a statement issued today by State Fuel Administrator Eugene C. Hultman. His report follows:

"Comparative New England receipts of anthracite: January 1, 1920, to June 30, 1921, 5,202,298; January 1, 1921 to June 30, 1921, 6,-252,000.

"During the first six months of the present calendar year New England received approximately 6,250,000 net tons of anthracite coal. This record is more than 1,000,000 tons, or 20 per cent. ahead of last year for the same period. During this same period the anthracite production has been 1,-500,000 tons, or 3 per cent. ahead of last year.

"In considering the above, it should be noted that Massachusetts started the present coal year with 467,000 net tons of domestic anthracite ahead of last year.

"During the first three months of the present coal year New England received approximately 1,900,000 net tons of bituminous coal. This record is almost 1,000,000 tons, or 20 per cent. behind last year for the same period. During this quarterly period the bituminous production has been 25,000,000 tons, or 21 per cent. behind last year."

Prohibition Bans Even 'Neat' Glass of Milk, Burke Roche Finds

Newport, R. I., July 29.—Francis Burke Roche, twin brother of Lord Fermoy of Great Britain, figured in an exciting soda counter scene here when the clerk politely informed him that it would be against the law to serve him a glass of milk.

"I said milk, not liquor," protested Burke Roche, who has been living abroad. "I can't serve you milk plain," said the clerk. "Maybe you would have a little soda in it," he suggested helpfully.

Thereupon Lord Fermoy's twin exploded, while divers of the Four Hundred stopped thinking about the weather and enjoyed the row.

It was finally explained to him that soda and confectionery stores, not having wine-sellers' licenses, could not sell milk clear.

SMALL PERSISTS IN CLAIM OF IMMUNITY

"Will Not Tolerate Interference," Governor Says as He Starts on Highway Tour

By International News Service.

Chicago, July 29.—Leaving his affairs in the hands of a "cabinet" of five attorneys, Governor Len Small, under indictment for alleged misappropriation of State interest funds, departed today on a tour of inspection of Illinois roads. The purpose of the tour is to obtain information to be used in the awarding of contracts for road construction.

He conferred this forenoon with a delegation from Lake County regarding road building there. The tour contemplated will require several days, making it evident that the Governor will not return to Springfield, where warrants for his arrest are held by Sheriff Henry Mester, until some time next week at least.

Governor Small persists in his contention that the sheriff has no authority to arrest him.

"The executive functions cannot be interfered with," he said. "The constitution so holds, regardless of the opinion of Judge E. S. Smith of Sangamon County."

"But suppose Sheriff Mester attempts to serve the warrants while you are conducting your survey?" the Governor was asked.

"I will not tolerate any interference," he replied.

Governor Small probably will have to face one or more women on the jury that will try him next September. It was learned today that the names of scores of Sangamon County women had been placed in the September jury wheel from which will be drawn a jury for the Governor's trial.

THOMPSON'S SPA CUTS 'SPECIAL' MEALS 5 CENTS

Notice has been given of a reduction of five cents in nearly all the "specials" on the bill of fare at Thompson's Spa, in effect next Monday.

The Spa is keeping in close touch with details of costs and overhead expenses, according to Malcolm Eaton of the cost and sales department, and is prepared to lower prices whenever conditions appear to justify reductions.

Whether the soda prices are also to be reduced is still undecided.

BOSTON SOCIAL GAIETIES

Rosamond Thomas Weds Tomorrow

By BETTY ALDEN

Though the month is July, and society everywhere is very much occupied with matter of summer pastime along the sea-shore or at the mountains, still, Boston's far-famed "four hundred" is evincing considerable interest in two weddings scheduled for tomorrow. Miss Rosamond Thomas Bennett's marriage to George Sturgis will be solemnized at 3 P. M. in Weston, at "Brookwood," the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Crocker Bennett. The wedding is to be very quiet, and only members of the family have been invited. Miss Bennett, who is a member of the 1915 Bowling Circle and the Vincent Club, will be attended by her sister, Mrs. Lewis Zehner, of Worcester (Barbara Bennett), as matron of honor. The only other attendant will be Rodney Smith, of Groton, who will act as best man. Mr. Sturgis is a son of Robert Shaw Sturgis, of No. 133 Bay State Road, and is a Harvard man, class of '15. A small reception will follow the ceremony.

The other nuptial of the day is that of Miss Veronica Frazier and Cecil Murray, who will be married tomorrow in St. Phillip's Church, Harlem, N. Y., where Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Frazier, Veronica's parents, have their Summer home. Though the bride and groom-to-be, Murray being the son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Murray, are a Hall from Gatham, there are several reasons why Boston is taking quite a good-motherly interest in the affair. Henry Murray, Jr., who will be best man for his brother, recently married "Joe" Rantoul, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Neal Rantoul of Boston, a few years ago. Cecil Murray, also, who is a Harvard man, was one of his alma mater's crack athletes, having been captain of the Harvard varsity crew in 1918. In the Summer he and his wife visit the latter's parents at the Rantoul Summer home in Beverly Farms. Augustus Thorndike, Jr., Robert Murray, 3d, and Edward S. Brewer, all of Boston, will be among the ushers at the ceremony, so that the Hub is to be well represented. Both Veronica and her future life mate are taking a medical course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons and will continue their studies after their marriage.

The Boston Summer colony at Newport has been increased in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Hayward of Chestnut Hill, who have arrived at the Rhode Island resort to be the guests of the latter's sister, Mrs. Henry Ware Putnam, for the remainder of the Summer. Mrs. Putnam's estate is on Eastern Point.

Mrs. Henry C. Frick and her daughter Helen of New York, are arriving this week from Europe, and will soon be escorted at Pride's Crossing, where their Summer home, "Eagle Rock," is one of the most frequently pointed-out estates along the North Shore.

Tomorrow's "Garden Day" will be held at the Beverly Cove residence of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman of No. 98 Beacon street. The splendid gardens of the estate will be open to the public from 2 until 6 o'clock, under the auspices of the North Shore Garden Club.

While the John Hays Hammonds of Chestnut Hill are touring the Orient, their summer home on the outskirts of Gloucester is being enlarged and remodelled, as is also the bungalow of John Hays Hammond, Jr., who lives most of the year in this house on his father's estate. The Hammonds recently purchased the Foster cottage, near their own place, which will be occupied by Mrs. Hammond's sister, Mrs. Charles Hoyle of Washington, and her three daughters.

When Harold Vanderbilt arrives at the North Shore, August 5, prepared to remain for a two months' stay, he will find quite a number of Harvard '17 classmates on the Shore, as well as fellow members of the Knickerbocker and New York Yacht Clubs, who will not hesitate to entertain him, I am sure.

SACRED HEART PARISH PICNIC TOMORROW

The annual picnic and field day of Sacred Heart parish, East Boston, will be held tomorrow at Wood Island Park. There will be a long list of track and field events. Special athletic contests for the children have also been arranged. This year's picnic is being arranged by the Rev. John M. Burke and Rev. P. J. McCarthy.

One of the prominent members of the Newport Summer colony who patronized the charity lawn fete held at "Rosslyn," Mrs. Gravesnor Wilder's Summer estate at Newport.

WANDERER'S HANGING DELAYED 60 DAYS

Chicago, July 29.—Governor Small has granted a reprieve of sixty days to Carl Wanderer, sentenced to hang today.

The action was taken at request of William R. McCauley, State commander of the American Legion. He asked for the delay so a commission of alienists can test the sanity of the man who is accused of killing his wife and a ragged stranger.

EXPECT ARREST OF RUM PLOT LEADER

"Master Mind" in Bogus Prescription Blank Scheme Is Known, Say Police

The "Master Mind" of the huge plot to swamp Greater Boston with counterfeit liquor prescription blanks was to be arrested by Federal Secret Service men today.

His arrest was to be followed by two more today and a roundup within the next few days of more than twenty men who have been distributing the spurious blanks.

Federal agents believe that last twenty-four hours arrested five men and solved the mess which they claim has been used to turn out thousands of the forged blanks.

They found the press, they declare, in the basement of the home of J. William Benson, aged twenty-four, of No. 102 Cass street, West Roxbury. Besides the press they also found a bundle containing 500 fake prescriptions and type similar to the type used in printing the blanks.

RAID WENT ROXBURY HOME.

Since July 1 bogus prescriptions have literally flooded the city and the ramifications of the counterfeiters' scheme extended to widely separated points of Greater Boston.

Acting on information they received they obtained a Federal search warrant and raided the West Roxbury home of Benson.

On entering the basement of the house they found the power press and were next astonished to discover boxes of prescription blanks in a bundle. Further search revealed racks and a cabinet filled with the style of type used by the government in printing the blanks. The press was ready for operation and Benson admitted the prohibition agents say, that he had printed at least 1,000 of the bogus blanks.

SOLD FOR $1.50 APIECE.

He stated that his contract called for $20 per thousand. He is said to have admitted that he knew the prescriptions were sold for $1.50 apiece after the name of some physician had been forged to the bank. Benson was held in $1,000 bonds, charged with counterfeiting public records of the United States.

Preceding the raid of Benson's home the agents arrested the following, who are charged with publishing and passing the counterfeit blanks at the drug store of P. W. Salisbury, No. 333 Centre street, Jamaica Plain.

BRITAIN SENDS SHARP NOTE TO FRANCE

Warns Briand That Policy of "Acting Alone" May Break Up Entente

By International News Service.

London, July 29.—Great Britain has formally warned France that unless she abandons her present policy there will be a general break-up of the European entente, it was learned this afternoon.

This warning was contained in a note dispatched by Marquis Curzon, the Foreign Secretary, in reply to a previous communication from Premier Briand of France, dealing with Upper Silesia.

The French note, which was received here yesterday, was described as the sharpest of all the Franco-British exchanges.

One British official who was conversant with the contents said that the tone "resembled an ultimatum" and that the language "was comparable with a threat to sever Anglo-French relations."

Great Britain in her reply declared that a continuance of the French policy of acting alone threatens to break down the entente cordiale.

Great Britain repeated that there was no necessity for sending additional reinforcements to Upper Silesia at this time.

The British communication concludes with the hope that the French note on Thursday is not "the considered opinion of the French government."

VIOLET EDMANDS RETURNS AFTER NINE YEARS

Violet Edmands, once the fiancee of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, for love of whom the minister poisoned his former sweetheart, Avis Linnell, has returned to Boston to the scene of the great tragedy of her life.

Broken down in health and spirit the young woman left Boston soon after her faithless suitor went to his death in the electric chair. She went away to forget her sorrows in ministering to others.

For nine years she has devoted her life to the world's unfortunates. In social service and missionary work she has tried to erase the memories of the past in her work among the slums of New York and Tokio.

Two weeks ago she slipped into Boston. Her coming was unknown but to a few of her nearest friends.

"Love and motherhood are not for me," she said. "I have dedicated my life to mothering the children of the world's poor."

Fresh From Paris

PARIS, France.

AN unusually effective frock of black silk jersey is distinguished by its deep girdle of self fabric. A fold of the jersey falling from the lack of the girdle extends in a graceful line across the lower side-edge of the skirt and up the front, thus achieving the one-sided drapery of which Paris continues exceedingly fond. A wide-brimmed hat of gray crepe worn with this dress is trimmed with narrow black ribbons depending from three turquoise balls.

THE black and white mode which has taken such a hold on summer fashions is to have a decided influence on Autumn frocks as well. White embroidery in a unique Chinese lantern pattern strews the skirt of a black satin frock worn over white crepe de Chine, while the white crepe sleeves are embroidered in black. The bodice is slit half-way up, and the skirt opens its entire length, showing a line of the white crepe.

'BELLE OF THIRD AVENUE' TO FIGHT DECREE

Mrs. Mary Casey Thorne Declares Love for Sailor Was "Pure and Untainted"

New York, July 29.—The love of Mrs. Mary Casey Thorne, "Belle of Third Avenue," for Raymond B. Wilson, twenty-three years old, corespondent named by her husband, Joel Wolfe Thorne, wealthy clubman, was "pure and untainted," according to her counsel, John G. Dyer.

Dyer made a statement declaring the fight had just begun, after David R. Daley, referee who took testimony in the counter divorce suit brought by Thorne in answer to his wife's action for separation, found for the husband.

BELIEVE IRISH PEACE PARLEY AT HAND

Sinn Fein Said to Have Reached Secret Decision Favorable to London Meeting

London, July 29.—The outlook for a formal Irish peace parley in London was very bright today.

The Dublin correspondent of the Manchester Guardian reported that the Sinn Fein Cabinet had reached a secret decision which is believed to open the way to a peace conference in this city to settle for all time the troublesome Irish issue.

It was believed, however, that Eamon de Valera's reply to Premier Lloyd George's peace offer will not be sent to London for a day or two, possibly not until Monday.

De Valera has been sitting with his Cabinet in Dublin every day this week. For a time British officials were perplexed by the unusual length of time taken by the Republicans to canvass the English offer, but the optimism prevalent in Dublin is now reflected here.

Kiss Bought for $5 at Coney Island Jumps to $85

New York, July 29.—Hermann Schlueter, of West Twenty-third street, declared in a Coney Island court that Miss Helen Joyce, with whom he was riding in a park concession, had raised the price of kisses from $5 to $85 without warning.

He had offered her $5 for a kiss, he said. She accepted, and he took the kiss. Then, he said, he discovered that his wallet, containing $85, was missing.

Miss Joyce is held in $1,500 bail on a larceny charge.

TWO BURNED IN TREMONT ST. FIRE

Painfully Injured While Assisting Dwellers to Escape Flames

Seeing flames bursting from the top floor of the five-story building at No. 280 Tremont street early today, Emanuel Fernandez, twenty-six years old, of No. 280 Bowen street, South Boston, and George Harvey, twenty-two years old, of No. 41 Forbes street, Jamaica Plain, rushed into the building and aroused the occupants on the lower floors.

Both men were badly burned about the hands and face while assisting some of the dwellers to get out and were taken to Carney Hospital for treatment.

The top floor is occupied by Charles Victor Emmanuel

Hunter's Bullet Hits Woman on Piazza 4 Miles Away

Pittsfield, July 29.—A bullet, believed to have been fired from a high-powered rifle, held by a woodchuck hunter on Greylock Mountain, four miles away, was embedded in the shoulder of Mrs. Mary Winnie, ninety-six years old, as she sat on the piazza of her home at Troy.

The police are investigating the shooting.

Hosie. The blaze is said to have started from spontaneous combustion of moving picture material. Damage was $3,000.

SCORES MEDICAL STUDENTS WHO TOOK BONUS

Dr. Edsall Declares Many Who Accepted $100 Were Never in Active Service

Members of the Massachusetts Medical Society of New England are calling medical students who were part of the forces inactive during the war, though subject to call to duty by the government, "avaricious medical students" for accepting the bonus of $100 from the State after leaving the service.

Dr. David L. Edsall, of Boston, in speaking of these men said, "Some were honest enough to decline this money, since no service was rendered. A considerable number applied for the bonus and in the application made the statement that they were in active service, while they never attended training camps and in many instances did not wear uniforms and were never under orders."

BIG SPLASH AT START OF RACE IS THRILLER

Ever see a bevy of pretty girls standing on a raft with hands over their heads waiting for a signal to plunge into water and take part in a big race?

Well, that opportunity will be given thousands of persons at the Charles River Esplanade, West End, Saturday afternoon, August 27.

On that occasion the Boston American will hold its annual water carnival in the Charles river basin, an event looked forward to with great interest by swimming girls in all sections of New England.

When the signal gun is fired the girls will dive into the stream from the float in front of the Union Boat Club house and begin their journey upstream to a stakeboat near Harvard bridge, turning at the left of the boat, and then down stream to the starting point.

The distance is one and one-half miles and 200 feet, according to measurements taken yesterday. No better course could be mapped out for a race. It runs close to the seawall, and gives spectators a chance to watch the girls as they wend their way through the water.

As the girls plunge into the water there is a great splash and a lot of foam is kicked up. The scene beggars description. Spectators are thrilled.

The winner of the race will be adjudged New England amateur girl champion of 1921 and will be presented a beautiful prize. The next four to finish will receive handsome gifts. All others who complete the course will get a diploma which may be framed and placed in their homes as a memento of the occasion.

The water sports to be held in connection with the race will be of an elaborate nature. John J. (Matty) Flaherty and his able corps of life savers from Revere Beach will give exhibitions of fancy diving from an elevated spring board on the Union Boat Club house.

All swimming girls at beaches in and about Boston are invited to take part in the big race. All desirous of entering will please fill out the blank elsewhere on this page and mail it to the Swimming Editor, Boston American, No. 80 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

Be sure to write your own name.

Do not take the liberty of sending another girl's name without her consent. There is a penalty for taking such liberties.

Send your photograph in bathing attire.

They're here!

Fresh, juicy, luscious pears—filled to the core with flavor! Car after car of these California Bartlett Pears are rolling in—to make your summer a cooler, more healthful one. No finer pears than these ever left California's orchards. No pear is at once so juicy and so meaty.

What a refreshing sensation it is—on a hot, "wilty" day—to let your teeth sink into a California Bartlett Pear! Cool as a mountain stream comes the juice of this sweet-flavored fruit. That's Nature's way of quenching thirst.

Remember, too, that California Bartlett Pears have more real food value than almost any other fresh fruit. Because they are just-ripe, mellow and fine-textured, these pears are more easily digested than many raw fruits. You will want to eat them as they are—peel and all. For many of the valuable mineral salts in fruits lie just beneath the skin.

And here's the surprising thing about these rich, juice-full pears: with all their fineness of flavor and texture, California Bartlett Pears cost much less than you'd expect. Buy a dozen today at the nearest fruit store—and see! After that you'll leave a standing order for a dozen a day. They'll keep the heat away—and keep you in better health the summer through!

CALIFORNIA PEAR GROWERS ASSOCIATION - SAN FRANCISCO

ALL the skill in pear growing that has come down through the years is reflected in these California Bartlett Pears that come cross-country to lighten the heat of your summer days. The California Pear Growers Association itself stands sponsor for the quality and flavor of these fresh, luscious pears —remember that.

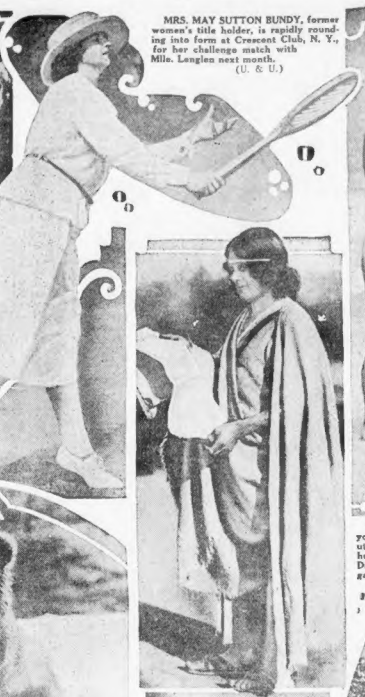
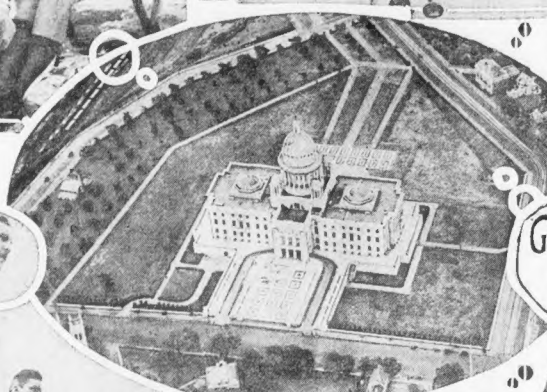
GIRL, JILTED BY MAN SHE STOLE FOR, SHUTS HEART TO MEN

ART! This artist has built up a big trade at the California beaches by painting decorative figures on the shoulders, arms and et cetera of the bathing girls. Shown painting et cetera of sea nymph. (U. & U.)

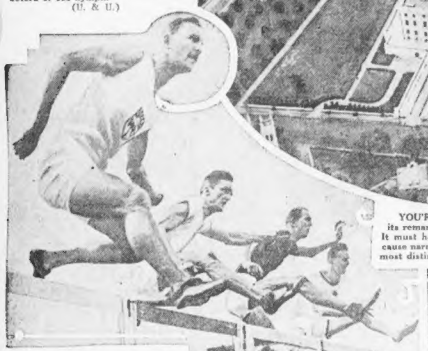
GRECIAN GLADIATORS! These picturesque chaps, the flower of the Greek army, are called eozones and everyone of them stands more than 6 feet tall and has distinguished himself by bravery Shown on guard before the King's quarters. (W. W.).



MRS. MAY SUTTON BUNDY, former women's title holder, is rapidly rounding into form at Crescent Club, N. Y., for her challenge match with Mlle. Lenglen next month. (U. & U.)



YOU'RE WRONG! This is not the Capitol at Washington despite its remarkable resemblance. It's the beautiful Capitol at Providence. It must have been taken in the wee sma' hours of the morning because nary a lobbyist can be seen entering the structure. One of the most distinctive aerial photos ever taken in R. I. (U. & U.)



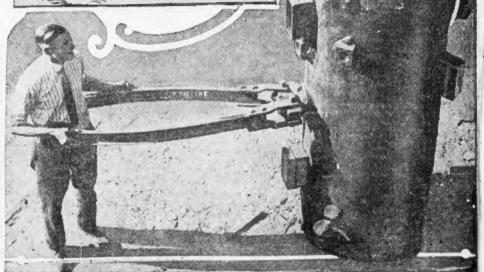
SMASH went the European hurdle record in this dash between German and Swedish athletes. Everyone of them broke old mark in event. Striking action picture. (W. W.)

KINGS OF SWAT! Babe Ruth is showing Tom Gibbons how he hits. (U. & U.)

FAIRY GODMOTHER! Mrs. Robert Goelet of N. Y., just elected vice-president of the French American Union for Open Air Schools, will enter upon her new duties at once. (U. & U.)

CLOUD TERROR TERRIFIES CROWD! Scores were driven helter skelter when this big aerial bag, the C-2, landed on the polo grounds in Potomac Park, New York. Only the fact that the area is large and permitted an easy escape prevented a serious accident. The dirigible, carrying a crew of seven men, was on its way from the bombing tests at Langley Field to Camp Dix, New Jersey. The big bag suddenly appeared above the park, hovered a moment in the air and then gracefully and not without speed, swooped down on the crowd below. (U. & U.)

SPREADING DEATH! Japan dreads the Summer season because it brings with it the terrible cholera. Here is shown a policeman putting up a placard issued by the Department of Health, and warning the public against the spreading of the vicious malady. Hundreds die from the disease every year in Nippon land, and only precautions like these prevent great loss of life. The placard says—Oh, read it yourself! (Int.)



BUSINESS IS PICKING UP! Have you ever thought you'd like to hunt buried treasure? Most of us have, particularly after reading some thrilling tale of buccaneers and blood-stained gold. With this new invention treasure hunting will have been made a thing of ease and romance. The diving bell, created by Alex O. Tesch of Chicago, is equipped with powerful arms and strong searchlights and the propellers are driven by an 8-horse power motor. Diagram shows how valuables can be picked up by the sea diver. (Int.)

WHEW! If this weather keeps up I'll guess I'll have to quit my regular job here in the Bronx (N. Y.) Zoo and hustle back to the cool Rocky Mountain summits. However, I manage to weary away the hot days with a splash in my big tank. But, oh boy! this fur coat of mine is warm. (Int.)

GEAN KOSMAN, 19-year-old girl, who stole for and was jilted by her fiance, has declared her heart is hereafter like stone to all men. Stole from woman she was visiting. (Int.)

WUXTRY! This chap is not an actor in the Passion Play, merely a newsboy from the ultra-modern school of Raymond Duncan in Paris, trying to sell his wares on the Place de la Concord. (U. & U.)

DAINTY! The white silk lace-up clock has caught Paris by storm. First photo of fad to reach U. S. The tag ends of the clock are tied into a pretty bow. (C.)

ALL UPSET! One of the primary reasons for the popularity of beach resorts is, of course its freedom from urban conventions and the healthful, frolicsome life permitted. Thus, scenes like this are just a part of the gay life of such resorts as Nantasket and Old Orchard Beach. This fair bather believes standing on her head in the sands of Cornwall Beach, England, is an aid to beauty. (W. W.)

SAND-WICH! Miss Ann Ilgovsky of 76 Fairview avenue, Malden, makes a charming seaside siren, particularly in this chic sea suit. Snapped at Nantasket. Another $5 prize winner in the sea beauty test. Have you sent in your favorite beach photo yet? It is illegal to send in photos of professional beauties with other names. Address Pictorial Editor, Boston American. Photos must be clear.

CONNOLLY TELLS OF IRISH DANCE TRAGEDY

TORTURED IRELAND

By JAMES B. CONNOLLY

Famous New England Author and Journalist.

(A fine little touch, that putting the able-bodied men in jail. Besides keeping strong young men out of possible future action, it leaves the old mothers and so on dependent on them in a bad way. Other mothers might in this wise be brought to meditate on that and be guided accordingly.)

Mrs. Portly was making out—"Thanks be to God and neighbors poor as herself almost. Jim Tierney, and the good boy he is, gave me his mattress and he wished to give me his bedstead to go with it —God's glory restore him—but as you can see for yourself, there isn't the room to set it up in my little hut."

She was seventy-five years old and she had been to visit one of the boys the week before this, but she was not allowed to see him.

"Come back in two months," the officer said to me, 'and we may allow you to see him.' Two months again, after all the long way I travelled, and God knows where will I be getting the money to be traveling so far again—and they will let me see him maybe."

Even in her affliction she was without no hatred for the arch enemy.

"Sometimes I don't know should we curse them or leave them to God," she said as I left her.

There were two men cementing a wall that the military had damaged. I was talking with them when another man came along on a wheel and joined them.

"A man's bicycle or his life, they are neither of them safe on the road with their lorries turning to knock him into the ditch, and to be having a shot at him in passing 'tis so they feel in the humor or doing" he said.

DRIVEN FROM FIELDS.

"Sure, a poor man can't cut a sod o' turf or pick a potater beside the road but they will be havin' a pot shot at him from their lorries," said one of the men repairing the wall.

(This shooting at men in the fields by the military from their lorries is so common in the south and west of Ireland that in many sections the farmers have given up the cultivation of fields near the roads. One of the reasons given by the I. R. A. for making the roads impassable to the military was they wished to protect farmers who had to work in fields near such roads.)

Before the afternoon was over I saw an Irish woman almost weep. She was the wife of Michael Hennessy. I met Hennessy while talking to the soldier Casey's father. He was standing close to a five-foot wall, wondering, I think, who I was and what my business was.

Forty-six years old he was, but he made me feel—such was the look of him—that he could take two steps and clear that five-foot wall—leggins, working clothes and all. A dynamo of a man, with keen, bright eyes and fighting jaw, and when from him I looked to his wife, I said to myself: "The barracks people say you have three sons in the I. R. A. I'll bet they are tough lads at close quarters."

BACK INTO FLAMES.

All the savings of a hard-working life had gone into Hennessey's farm and home. He valued the house and what was in it at $10,000. When they came to burn his home, they gave him five minutes to take out what he valued most. Hennessy refused to take out anything. But his wife hurried inside to make the most of the promised five minutes.

She selected the two fine bed ticks on which the four youngest children slept, and next she took her sewing machine, and she carried them down stairs and placed them together on the ground; and as she did so the officer in charge looked at them, picked up the bed ticks and threw them back into the flames.

He gave an order; a soldier brought the butt of his rifle down on the sewing machine; but the machine was stouter than he thought for, and he had to get a heavy stone and smash it up that way. Hennessy was standing there in his shirtsleeves, his coat over his arm and his cap in hand:

"Here," snapped Hennessy, "make a clean job of it!" and sealed cap and coat into the flames. They have shot men for saying less than that, but Hennessy never feared to be shot.

They burned his dog.

HARD ON CHILDREN.

There were no tears in Mrs. Hennessy's eyes, but there threatened to be when she was telling of the children's bed ticks and the sewing machine. She put up the corner of her apron to head them off, which was the nearest I saw of any Irishwoman who had been punished by the military to crying.

The Hennessays when I saw them were quartered in an earthen-floored little shack where once he kept his two side cars.

"It was hard on the young children," said Hennessy. "For days after the fire they would come running from school to the old place without thinking, the poor things, they would look at the ruins and cry."

There is the report of a casual visit to a village within five miles of Limerick, a visit so casual that I did not set down the name of the place—Ballybricken or Caherconish, one or the other it was.

You can make just such casual visits in almost any part of the south and west and get pretty much such results. In many villages the story would be worse; more outrages and more torturings.

"CHRISTMAS DANCE" TRAGEDY.

Returning to Limerick, I passed the cemetery where the murdered Clancy's two friends had been shot down merely for hovering near to see him buried. I also passed the hall—in the village of Bruff this was—where the tragedy of the "Christmas Dance" happened.

Last Christmas week many of the young men on the run, who could not longer bear to stay away, were home to see their people. The young women of Bruff got up a dance in their honor, thinking to do it quietly. But the Crown spies were on the trail.

It was the middle of the dance on the night of the day after Christmas when a large number of soldiers and Black and Tans surrounded the place. Very few of the Irish boys had arms and those who did have them—revolvers—were posted outside to watch out for raiders.

One of these sentries challenged some approaching military to halt. They went to halt and the dance sentry fired and wounded a Black and Tan. The Black and Tans fired in return, wounding a sentry. The lads inside the hall heard the firing and at once tried to get away from the hall and away from the girls so that they might not be fired upon too. As the young fellows rushed out from the lighted hall the military with machine guns and rifles stood outside in the dark and shot them down. Four were killed and about twenty others wounded. One of the men killed in the rush from the hall was an American citizen named Quinlan.

BATTLING BRAVES OUT TO TOPPLE PIRATES

By NICK FLATLEY

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 29.—The battling Braves are back on the track of real fighting; big crowds and all the thrills and chills that go with a series directly concerned with the winning of a pennant. The Mitchmen, after closing two in Cincinnati and nearly dropping the third, opened up a three-game riot with the leading Pirates this afternoon.

It was the biggest crowd the Pittsburgh athletes have been up against as the Giants have just departed hence, after collecting three of the four games played.

The Corsairs now lead the New York entry by but a single contest and the world is beginning to wonder if the strain of leading the league all season hasn't finally got on the nerves of the Dreyfus athletes.

The Pirates fear the Braves just as much as they do the Giants and don't hesitate to say so. They are lucky, and know it, to emerge with the large end of that thrilling engagement in Boston and are just a bit fearful that perhaps fortune is about to turn.

All the Braves are looking for the breaks in this series. Boom or bust. Pep returned in the ultimate game in Cincinnati and they are just as eager to get into this today as they were the previous one, which is some anxiety.

The Braves really have a fine chance now, just as good as any of their previous opportunities. The Pirates are only six games away after a cleanup, as you can figure for yourself would just divide the margin. And three games are nothing in the life of a pennant contender in July.

While the Braves and Pirates are fighting the Giants are mixed up in a six-game affair with the Reds, doubleheaders today and tomorrow, single pastimes Sunday and Monday.

Back there in Cincy, the Giants are likely to stumble, just as the Braves did.

Pat Moran, after a terrible Spring and early Summer, is finally getting some pitching. His stars are all in, shape, and the team is playing really good baseball.

The Reds never should be in seventh place anyhow, and both the Cincy players there are fighting now for a climb at least close to the first division.

After four days of excitement with the Pirates, the somewhat somnolent conditions at Cincinnati are likely to affect the Giants.

The Reds have been tough for them all year, you know as we remarked earlier, the Braves are in a spot where they can profit greatly, in fact decide definitely whether or not they have the stuff to stay up in the fight.

Everybody in Pittsburgh is baseball mad and know all the ways, wherefores, ifs, buts, and all those things. Enormous crowds have been turning out there and the attendance at this series is likely to shatter a few records.

Big Joe Oeschger, who has only pitched nine innings in the past week was ready to open this series and get even with the Pirates for the defeat they pinned on him in Boston. When that disaster happened Joseph had won six in a row and looked like he never would stop.

The Braves will not get Cooper until Monday, and accordingly had none of the Jinx idea in their sun-burnt skulls when they went into action.

They greeted Adams and Reaves in any particular fears about what he can do to them.

The whole outfit is showing signs of recovering from the batting slump that nerived more than a week ago. All the team needs to run up another string of wins is the normal number of base hits.

Cincinnati, O., July 28.—Black-eyed Horace Ford decided that being a star has no recognizance until your team is winning ball games, so Horace knocked off a couple in the ninth tilt with the Reds and the Mitchmen started the advance on Pittsburgh with one victory grabbed in Cincinnati.

Horace, whose eyes normally are blue or brown or something like that, has become a lifting demon since a hot bender smashed his prognosis and incidentally knocked his batting eye into functioning.

His single in the seventh round scored Tony Boeckel, who had been passed, and his suicide fly in the ninth counted Tony once more, the that occasion Tony got the base knock. So you can see how utter infelicity shared most of the glory between them.

* * *

The count of the affair was 2 to 1 and the finish as hectic as the weather. There were Reds gasping for breath on the base paths when the final out was made. The game is a game and it brought the Tribe within six lunges of the lead, which gap should be diminished, considerably, over in Pittsburgh.

* * *

The game for seven innings was a fine pitching one between long John Watson, who hurls with his left arm, and longer Eppa Rixey, who is a southpaw. Those hostiles picked John some more frequently than our Braves did Eppa, but the lank Carolina farmer was decidedly there in the pinches, and until the finish it looked as if the Reds never would score.

Eppa was extricated from several tickish positions, notably in the fourth, which Captain Will Southworth opened with a stout two-base blow to left centre. Nicholson bunted him along to third and put things up to Tony. That redoubtable youth knocked a liner that smacked the top of Eppa's outstretched glove.

* * *

The agate fell down, and the enormous southpaw reached over, picked it up and pegged to first. Southworth held third and there was a four revolution when Umpire McDermick declared Boeckel out. To all of us it seemed as though Tony had beaten the ball by a step. But the decision held just the same and it cost a run, as Hollke confirmed the inning with a long fly to left.

GOLF IS MAKING IMPRESSION ON PARK BOARD

Superintendent Instructed to Study Facilities in Western Cities

Golf, as a pastime growing in popular favor, has been officially recognized by the Park and Recreation Department of the city of Boston. The commissioners have come to a realization that a more liberal policy must be established in regard to it.

For that reason Mayor Peters has granted permission for Charles A. Hogan, superintendent of parks, to attend the annual convention of the National Park Superintendents' Association, to be held in Detroit from August 22 to 25, inclusive.

In addition to gathering information on golf at the convention, Superintendent Hogan has been ordered by the park commissioners to visit Chicago and Buffalo and study the management of the golf links and bath houses in those cities.

WHITNEY HORSES IN POOR SHAPE AT SARATOGA

Saratoga, July 29.—Harry Payne Whitney's two famous thoroughbreds John P. Grier and Upset are not at their best. Something is ailing them, and James Rowe, the veteran trainer, will not say what it is. They have been on the slow side of the track recently and some horsemen here say they are in a bad way and will not be able to race at the coming meet.

Others say they are out with minor ills and will be back in training within a few days. Still others declare they will never race again.

STUMBLING BLOCKS IN HERMAN'S PATH

Pete Herman is again the king of the bantams, and, as usual, the fight experts have agreed that he is alone in his class and as safe as the day is long, with no worthy opponents in sight.

All that listens well, but Mr. Herman will regretfully but readily recall one Young Montreal, the Pride of Providence, who whipped the living livers out of the New Orleans champion not once, but twice, and the rethroned ruler of the little fellows is not making any noise like a bout over this way.

And if Young Montreal is not enough we have right here in the dear old Hub another fast stepping boy in the person of Abe Friedman, who has even gone so far as to show the way to the Rhode Island star.

The fight fans are great little fellows for "past performances," and this wonderful Herman boy will have to show them how good he really is by giving these two New England battlers a chance at the title.

We can stand another champion in our midst, and if Herman is all that the out-of-town reports are claiming for him he will come through.

Six members of the Indianapolis team appeared lately with their upper lips covered by a hairy growth, said to be caused by failure to shave.

LEONARD WORKS HARD FOR BOUT WITH TENDLER

Champion Trains at Saranac Lake for Title Battle With Philadelphia Boy

Champion Benny Leonard is not taking any chances of being caught out of condition when he encounters Lew Tendler of Philadelphia, and the title-holders' foremost contender for his crown.

Leonard is at Saranac Lake, N. Y., and he intends staying there for three or four days. Then he will return to the city, do his road work, and a lot of it, in Central Park, and work out at Stillman's gymnasium.

This contest has been hanging fire for more than two years, and followers of the game throughout the country have been waiting patiently for it.

That there always has been more than the usual rivalry between Leonard and Tendler cannot be doubted.

Leonard, while usually a quiet sort of a chap, always flared up whenever Tendler's name was mentioned. "Why, all that fellow wants is a lot of cheap publicity at my expense," Benny often has said.

"He doesn't want to meet me, but if it happens that I ever get Tendler into the ring I will knock him for a goal just as sure as guns."

Red Sox Owner Agrees to Consider the Lower Prices

President H. H. Frazee of the Boston Red Sox is considering the suggestion made by Mayor Peters relative to the reduction of the admission prices at Fenway Park.

Such, at least, is the declaration of the Red sox owner, who shortly after his arrival in town, sent to City Hall an acknowledgment of His Honor's communication.

Owner Frazee's letter follows:

"July 28, 1921.

"Hon. Andrew J. Peters, Mayor
City of Boston.

"Dear Sir:

"On my arrival in the city today I received your letter relative to the prices of admission at Fenway Park.

"I assure you your letter will be given my very careful consideration, and I will communicate with you in reference to same within the next few days.

"Sincerely yours,

"H. H. FRAZEE, President.

In letter of third Pratt slapped single to right, Stuff and Vick flew out, Scott scorched one-baser to centre; then Gardner gummed Pittenger's grounder and Pratt was in, then Muddy made his second single and Scott scored. Two runs. Score—Red Sox 4, Indians 3.

* * *

With one down, first of fifth, Wamby walloped single to centre; advanced one when Spoke walked; advanced another when Smith sacrifice-flied to right; tripped home when Gardner slammed two-bagger to left. One run. Score tied.

SHIMIDZU AND WILLIAMS PLAY TENNIS FINALS AT LONGWOOD

By ROBERT E. HARLOW

Zenzo Shimidzu of Japan met R. Norris Williams, 2d, former national tennis champion, today, in the final round of the Longwood Bowl singles tournament on the Chestnut Hill courts. The winner will meet William M. Johnston of California in the challenge round Saturday.

Shimidzu, the silent man from the East, has been the surprise of the Longwood tournament. He was not rated as a top notch player when he started at Chestnut Hill, but that was because he did not show well in the matches he played in this country when he was just off the boat.

Those who had seen the Japanese court star at Wimbledon, England, and knew of the record he piled up in India, South America and Europe, realized that he was really a fine player, capable of holding his game with the best.

He has demonstrated that at Longwood by decisively beating Nat Niles and Wallace Johnson, and giving an exhibition of court covering and fast stroking which has not been surpassed by any other player in the tournament.

Shimidzu is not as fast as Killams. He is not as brilliant as the former American champion when Williams is right. His service lacks the punch of the American, but he is steadier and has fully as much head.

His physical condition will stand more punishment than Williams. It should be a fine match. They play beginning at 2:45 o'clock.

Johnston arrived at the courts and warmed up with Bill Crocker, the professional, Crocker gave him plenty of exercise.

Shimidzu advanced to the final round in the Longwood Bowl singles tournament at the Chestnut Hill courts by beating Wallace Johnson of Philadelphia in four sets, Scores 2—6, 6—0, 6—1, 7—5.

* * *

Some people have provided Shimidzu with the nickname "Chimmy," but the stolid son of the East is far from being a jazz baby, and the name ill befits him. Shimidzu is more like a bronze Indian chief, the kind we used to see in front of cigar stores a few years ago.

* * *

He is by far the most interesting figure in the Longwood tournament, and well he might be, for Shimidzu is no ordinary athlete. He has lived in Calcutta, in the Argentine, in Paris, London and in the Orient. He speaks six languages, including Hindu, and he has mastered tennis on several continents.

* * *

He probably could tell a few stories, but he prefers to listen. He does so far as to say that he never tires in a tennis match and that he eats cold meat and anything food. This is his first visit to the United States, but he has seen so much of the world that even New York failed to give him a real thrill.

* * *

If he were frank, he would probably say that there were things in Calcutta and elsewhere on the world's map quite as interesting as tall buildings.

Shimidzu did not create a sensation when he came to Longwood. He was defeated by Voshell at the Aga-wam tournament, and was considered second class, but J. D. E. Jones of Providence, who saw the Japanese play last month at Wimbledon, said that he knew Shimidzu was a far better player than he had been credited in America.

* * *

He demonstrated that in his match with Wallace Johnson. Johnson has the meanest chop-stroke of any player in the world. Many a Longwood thought this twisting shot would leave the Tokio sportsman flat-footed. As a matter of fact, Shimidzu fairly devoured it with his terrific wrist and shoulder drives, both forearm and back hand.

* * *

Johnson, playing with his usual form, won the first set, six games to two. The Philadelphian stood on the base line and cut the ball to all corners of Shimidzu's court. The Japanese worked hard, but Johnson had all the better of it in that set. The chop stroke was new to Shimidzu. He was antidoted to merely return the ball, and in so doing, was at the mercy of Johnson.

* * *

With the opening of the second set, Shimidzu had converted himself. Now he could handle the quick shooting bounces the ball takes off Johnson's hat. He decided to put some pressure to his own shots and from then on, Johnson was licked. The more out Johnson drove the ball, the harder the Japanese slammed it back.

* * *

Shimidzu had a deadly measure on Johnson's baseline and with forearm and backhand, he took Johnson's most difficult volleys and bounces, and slashed them back at the American. Johnson was amazed at the agility of the Japanese to cover court. He proved a wonderful "getter," and frequently, when Johnson thought he had scored a placement, he was surprised to see the ball coming back at him.

* * *

The refusal of the Japanese to yield to cuts, discouraged Johnson. This and the fact that he realized he was losing his speed, whereas Shimidzu showed no sign whatever of weakening, finished Johnson. He lost the second set 6—0 and the third 6—1. The Philadelphian was quite groggy in the third set, and did not provide any opposition.

* * *

After the ten-minute rest Johnson returned for the fourth set with renewed determination, and took the lead with four games to three. But he could not maintain a fast pace and Shimidzu ran out the set 7—5.

* * *

R. Norris Williams came through in the lower half of the draw by beating W. J. Bates of California 7-5, 6-4, 6-3. Bates was within a point of winning the first set, 5—4, but he was no match for the former champion after that.

BRITISH STARS TIE WITH CORNELL AND PRINCETON

By JAMES FRANCIS,

New York, July 29.—America and Great Britain were deadlocked here yesterday in the second of the international track and field meets in which the athletes of Cambridge and Oxford competed against Uncle Sam's collegians. In this particular instance the British contingent met the representatives of Princeton and Cornell at the beautiful country home of the New York Club at Travers Island by a score of 5 to 5.

The indomitable courage of Beryl Rudd, Captain of the Oxford team, and Abrahams, weaver of the tight blue of Cambridge, pulled the British out of a tight hole for it was their victories in the half-mile run and the running broad jump, the last track events on the program of ten events that enabled the sons of John Bull to pull on even terms with their American rivals. With the score 5 to 3 in favor of the American collegians due to the victories of Halsey of Princeton in the 16-pound shot.

Stack of Cornell, in the running high jump; Stevenson of Princeton, in the quarter-mile run, and Massey of the same institution, in the 120-yard hurdles, and Foresman of Princeton in the three-mile run, the Cambridge and Oxford students came out on the field for the last events with their backs to the wall.

To all appearances it seemed that the British contingent would have little opportunity to pull the brand from the burning, but much to the astonishment of the 5,000 persons who crowded every available seat in the specially erected grandstand and on the lawn, Abrahams defeated Don Lourie, famous Tiger football player, for first honors in the broad jump with a leap of twenty-one feet eight inches, three more than the Princetonian could score, and then a few minutes later in a thrilling duel between Charley Carter, Cornell great half-miler, and Rudd, the last named came out victorious, scoring the point that caused the deadlock. His time was 1m. 56s.

SUMMARY:

100-Yard Dash—Won by Abrahams, Cambridge; second, Lovejoy, Cornell; third, McKim, Princeton. Time —10 2-5 seconds.

Says Limburger Cheese Is a Foreign Product; They Send It to America Because They Won't Let It Stay in Europe

People in the United States are peculiar, for thinks nothing is good unless it's imported. They buy a hat in Paris and they don't care if it's ruined so long as the label isn't hurt.

If they get a dress from London they think it isn't genuine unless it's got a lot of salt water spilled on it.

A suit is all right if it has a foreign label in it, but if they can read the label they think it's a fake.

They like Swiss cheese, and they don't mind the cheese being made in America if the holes come from Europe.

Limburger cheese is a foreign product. They send it over here because they couldn't let it stay over there.

They figure that American cheese is all right for baiting mouse traps.

They're not going to send all the way to Europe for sardines.

The American people also prefer imported sardines. A sardine is nothing but a catfish that went to school in Europe.

Imported or domestic, all sardines are equal when they get on the nursery shelf.

The only difference between domestic sardines and imported ones is about twenty-five cents.

Drinking men used to like nothing but Hyland gin, now they're glad to drink any kind they can get.

They'll pay ten dollars a quart and no questions asked.

A headache is the same whether it's imported or not.

We've got some imported dishes in this country that they've never heard of in Europe. One Chinaman living in this country for ten years and went home, but he came back to America again because he couldn't get any chop suey over there.

Some people think that Russian caviars aren't real unless they've got whiskers.

French pastry is nothing but American cake made by a Swedish baker.

They give it a French name and charge twenty-five cents for it. They couldn't get more than a dime for a piece of cheese cake.

They're glad to pay two dollars and a half for a couple of little frog's legs, but they kick when it costs them fifty cents for two big lamb chops.

One woman ordered some French ice cream and then asked the waiter how long it kept in case all the way over here on the boat.

WILSON-DOWNEY BATTLE WILL COST $75,000

By JACK CONWAY.

Johnny Wilson and Bryan Downey, who engaged in such a sensational battle at Cleveland, are expected to be signed for a return meeting over the fifteen-round route in New York.

Wilson, the middleweight champion of Cleveland, who in their first tussle became known in Boston, several of the local promoters began making efforts to sign Wilson and Downey. The demands of the two boxers, however, were so high that it was apparent at the outset that New York is the only city that can stage the bout.

Wilson will want $50,000 for another tussle with Downey, and the latter will try to secure at least $25,000.

* * *

Tex Rickard is the only promoter who could put on a show for such a couple of middleweights. As Rickard has the spot to stage the affair, he may be expected to begin negotiations for the frolic at once.

* * *

Wilson and Downey would draw a tremendous gate in New York. The middleweight champion, although not the most popular fighter with the fans, seems to be able to attract the crowd to the club where he fights. Maybe the fact that Wilson is not a popular hero is one of the reasons why he is such a good card.

* * *

The ruling the Ohio Boxing Commission, which holds that Downey is the new middleweight boss, is a joke. Referee Jimmy Gardner gave the verdict to Wilson on a foul when Downey scored a glancing blow while the latter was on his knees. Regardless of whether Gardner was in the ring to protect Wilson, he was the referee. And the word of the referee is law as to what happens in the ring. If this was not the case, there would not be anything definite about any of our big ring contests. A boxing board, or some other equally learned body, would always be in a position to step in and reverse the finding of the referee.

Imagine what a state of affairs there would be at every boxing bout if decisions could be reversed. Bets would naturally be paid on the decision of the referee. Such a day or so later a boxing board might come to bat with a decision which would upset the original finding. This would create a ridiculous decision.

* * *

Referees and umpires, often incompetent and in some cases dishonest, must have certain wide powers for the good of sport. Of course it is very regrettable when an official will stoop as low as to take advantage of his official position and commit an international wrong. The crooks, however, are soon found out and forced into other fields of labor. It is better that some improper decisions stand than to have the entire sporting world thrown into confusion by permitting verdicts to be changed.

Gus Platts, European middleweight champion, who meets Mike Gibbons at the Boston Arena on August 8, has beaten Johnny Basham twice, and has also fought twenty rounds with Georges Carpentier. Charley Harvey is managing Platts. This means that he is the real goods in the fighting line. Harvey, a wise man in the affairs of the ring, does not devote any of his time to second and third raters. He managed Jem Driscoll, Owen Moran, Ted (Kid) Lewis and several other great fighters.

Harvey could have secured bouts for Platts with third raters in New York. Charley, however, is an enthusiastic over the European champion that he immediately booked him for a tussle with Gibbons.

WILSON'S TITLE DECIDED BY 'CONTROL'

Cleveland, O., July 29.—Whether or no Bryan Downey is middleweight champion of the world hinges on the meaning of the word "control."

If control means just what Webster's Dictionary leads us to believe and what a leading Cleveland attorney and president of the city council, Clayton C. Townes, avers is the legal understanding of the word, then Johnny Wilson lost his title to Downey at Dunn Field Wednesday night.

Referee Jimmy Gardner of Boston selected by Wilson, ruled that Downey lost to Wilson on a foul but the boxing commissioners who had seen Downey knock Wilson down for the full count on three occasions, within a minute, held a conference in the centre of the ring and proclaimed Downey the world's champion, overruling the decision of the referee.

* * *

The boxing commission declares the fact that it has "control" of the referee at all times, empowers its members to reverse an unjust decision, and that on the face of it Gardner's verdict was a steal. The commissioners announced prior to the start of the bout that they would be at the ringside to see to it that all hands received a square deal.

* * *

Section 23 of the Cleveland boxing commission rules reads as follows: "In all boxing exhibitions participants, referees, timekeepers, seconds, examining physicians shall at all times be under the control and direction of the boxing commission."

* * *

* * *

That's the common sense definition of the word and common sense generally prevails in all law.

Attorney Townes says:

"Pursuant to your inquiry in reference to the power of the Cleveland Boxing Commission permit me to say that it is my judgment that the boxing commission has complete power and jurisdiction over boxing contests in Cleveland and this without qualification or limit, which is to say, that whatever rules they make they have the power to enforce with all the agencies of the State of Ohio behind them, police or otherwise.

* * *

"The only limitation upon their powers as I see it, is: first, that of the City Council to abolish the boxing board, or (second), that of the courts to enjoin them from doing any illegal act."

* * *

The Cleveland Boxing Commission, through Chairman J. R. Wilberding, proclaimed Downey world's champion and they will leave no stone unturned to establish his status not only in Ohio but all over the world.

GOLFERS WAR ON CONDITIONS IN TITLE PLAY

Outburst of Indignation Over 18-Hole Qualifying Test in Recent Tourney

Professional golfers and the top-notchers among the amateurs are in arms against the conditions under which the national open championship is played.

The outburst of indignation over the eighteen-hole qualifying test is strong and practically the protest is unanimous.

It is conceded that an eighteen-hole qualifying round is not a fair test of golfing ability, and this creates a serious situation and one which is going to be difficult to solve without injury to the great feature event of the year in golf.

The size of the field has become so large that something must be done. It is considered practically impossible to hold a thirty-six-hole qualifying round unless more than a week is devoted to the tournament.

* * *

One solution would be an arbitrary reduction of the size of the entrance list, based upon the rating and performances of those desiring to enter.

* * *

In studying the list of entrants for the Chevy Chase open, and going over them carefully with one of the best judges of golfers in the country, it is certain that at least forty entered the qualifying round who had no right, other than a desire to take a wild chance of shooting five strokes or more below their normal gait, to enter.

Study the golfers who qualified for the open. They are good golfers, naturally, or they would not have made the attempt.

In the list or those who failed to qualify an expert picked nineteen golfers who with ordinary luck would have qualified and who had they managed to evade the tough breaks of luck in those first eighteen holes would have given the best of the stars a hard fight.

In other words, a little slice, a bad lie, a worm cast on the green would be enough to prevent a Vardon from qualifying in such an eighteen-hole test if the break of luck ran against him.

There were at least ten golfers who failed to qualify in the eighteen-hole test who never or doubt would have qualified at thirty-six holes.

The Young Lady Who Had Advertised That She Knew All About Bookkeeping, Stenography and Typewriting Comes to See Quarren

WHAT HAS HAPPENED.

Dick Quarren, society idler and spendthrift, but clever and good looking, has fallen desperately in love with Strelsa Leeds. She has had one unfortunate matrimonial experience, and states her adverse into New York high society has eliminers by the score. Quarren meets her first at a masked ball given by Molly Wycherly, wins an hour out of her life on a wager and refrains from kissing her, as he tells her he is eager to do. She tells him there can be nothing serious between them, but she asks him to always think well of her. The Dankmere galleries are opened and Quarren takes a few days off at Witch-Hollow. Strelsa tells him she is to marry Langley Sprowl. He tells her that he loves her. Strelsa refuses to him the story of her marriage to Leeds. He returns to town and finds Westgward giving a lively finish to the art gallery.

HIS lordship went on piling up chairs. When he had finished he stood wondering around, hands in his pockets. Then he turned out all the electric lamps, drew the bay window curtains wide so that the silver radiance from the arclight opposite made the darkness dimly lustrous.

A little breeze stirred the hair on Quarren's forehead; Dankmere dropped into the depths of an armchair near him. For a while they sat together in darkness and silence, then the Englishman said abruptly:

"You've been very kind to me."

Quarren glanced up surprised. "Why not?"

"Because nobody else has any decent words to say to me or of me."

Quarren, amused, said: "How do you know that I have, Dankmere?"

"A man knows some things. For example, most people take me for an ass—they don't tell me so, but I know it. And if they don't take me for an ass they assume that I'm something worse—because I have a title of sorts, no money, an inclination for the stage and the people who make a living out of it."

Looking for a Rich Wife

"Also," Quarren reminded him, "you are looking for a wealthy wife."

"God bless my soul! Am I the only chap in America who happens to be doing that?"

"No; but you're doing it, conspicuously."

"You mean that I'm honest about it?"

Quarren laughed: "Anyway, perhaps that's one reason why I like you. At first I also thought it was merely stupidity."

Dankmere crossed his short legs and lighted his pipe.

"The majority of your better people have managed not to know me. I've met a lot of men of sorts, but they draw the line across their home thresholds—most of them. Is it the taint of vaudeville that their wives sniff at, or my rather celebrated indigence?"

"Both, Dankmere — and then some."

"Oh, I see. Many thanks for telling me. I take it you mean that it was my first wife they shy at."

Quarren remained silent.

"She was a lay-maid," remarked the Earl. "We were quite happy—until she died."

Quarren made a slight motion of comprehension.

"Of course my marrying her damned us both," observed the Earl.

"Of course."

"Quite so. People would have stood for anything else. . . . But she wouldn't—you may think it odd. . . . And I was in love—as there you are."

For a while they smoked in the semi-darkness without exchanging further speech, and finally Dankmere knocked out his pipe, pocketed it and put on his hat.

"You know," he said, "I'm really an ass. My tastes and my calls don't happen to coincide—that's all, Quarren."

They walked together to the front steps.

"When do we open shop?" asked the Earl, briskly.

"As soon as I get the reports from our experts."

"Won't business be dead all Summer?"

"We may do some business with agents and dealers."

"I see. You and I are to alternate as salesmen?"

"For a while. When things start, I want to rent the basement and open a department for repairing, relining and cleaning; and I'd like to be able to do some of the work myself."

"You"

"Surely. It interests me immensely."

"You're welcome, I'm sure," said Dankmere airily. "But who's to keep the books and attend to correspondence?"

"We'll get somebody. A young woman, who says she is well recommended, advertised in Thursday's papers, and I wrote her from Witch-Hollow to come around Sunday morning."

"That's tomorrow."

Quarren nodded.

So Dankmere trotted jauntily away into the night, and Quarren locked the gallery and went to bed, certain that he was destined to dream of Strelsa. But the sleek narrow head and slightly protruding eyes of Langley Sprowl was the only vision that peered cautiously at him through his sleep.

Very, Very Warm

The heated silence of a Sunday morning in June awoke him from a somewhat restless night. Bathed and shaved, he crept forth timidly to breakfast at the Founder's Club, where he still retained a membership. There was not a soul there excepting himself and the servants—scarcely a person on the avenues and cross streets which he traversed going and coming, only one or two old men selling Sunday papers at street stands, an old hag gleaning in the gutters, and the sparrows.

Clothing was a burden. He had some pongee garments which he put on, installed himself in the gallery with a Sunday paper, an iced lime julep and a cigarette, and awaited the event of the young lady who had advertised that she knew all about bookkeeping, stenography and typewriting, and could prove it.

She came about noon—a pale young girl, very slim in her limp black dress. At Quarren's invitation, seated herself at the newly purchased desk of late Brin.

Here, at his request, she took a page or two of dictation from him and typed it rapidly and accurately.

She had her own system of books to be able to do some of the work myself."

Very, Very Warm

The heated silence of a Sunday morning in June awoke him from a somewhat restless night. Bathed and shaved, he crept forth timidly to breakfast at the Founder's Club, where he still retained a membership. There was not a soul there excepting himself and the servants—scarcely a person on the avenues and cross streets which he traversed going and coming, only one or two old men selling Sunday papers at street stands, an old hag gleaning in the gutters, and the sparrows.

Clothing was a burden. He had some pongee garments which he put on, installed himself in the gallery with a Sunday paper, an iced lime julep and a cigarette, and awaited the event of the young lady who had advertised that she knew all about bookkeeping, stenography and typewriting, and could prove it.

She came about noon—a pale young girl, very slim in her limp black dress. At Quarren's invitation, seated herself at the newly purchased desk of late Brin.

Here, at his request, she took a page or two of dictation from further speech, and finally Dankmere knocked out his pipe, pocketed it and put on his hat.

"You know," he said, "I'm really an ass. My tastes and my calls don't happen to coincide—that's all, Quarren."

They walked together to the front steps.

"When do we open shop?" asked the Earl, briskly.

"As soon as I get the reports from our experts."

"Won't business be dead all Summer?"

"We may do some business with agents and dealers."

"I see. You and I are to alternate as salesmen?"

"For a while. When things start,

She had her own system of books to be able to do some of the work myself."

"You"

"Surely. It interests me immensely."

"You're welcome, I'm sure," said Dankmere airily. "But who's to keep the books and attend to correspondence?"

"We'll get somebody. A young woman, who says she is well recommended, advertised in Thursday's papers, and I wrote her from Witch-Hollow to come around Sunday morning."

"That's tomorrow."

Quarren nodded.

So Dankmere trotted jauntily away into the night, and Quarren locked the gallery and went to bed, certain that he was destined to dream of Strelsa. But the sleek narrow head and slightly protruding eyes of Langly Sprowl was the only vision that peered cautiously at him through his sleep.

Only a Short Trip

"Your best," he said amiably, "will probably be exactly what we require. . . . Did you bring any letters?"

She hesitated: "One," she said gravely. She searched in her reticule, found it, and handed it to Quarren, who read it in silence, then returned it to her.

"You were stenographer in Mr. Sprowl's private office?"

"Yes."

"This letter isn't signed by Mr. Sprowl."

"No. by Mr. Kyle, his private secretary."

"It seems you were there only six months."

"Six months."

"And before that where were you?"

"At home."

"Oh, Mr. Sprowl was your first employer?"

"Yes."

"Why did you leave?"

The girl hesitated so long that he thought she had not understood, and was about to repeat the question when something in her pallor and in her uplifted eyes checked him.

"I don't know why I was sent away," she said in a colorless voice.

He thought for a while, then, carelessly: "I take it that there was nothing irregular in your conduct?"

WHEN A GIRL MARRIES

ROMANCE OF NEWLY WEDDED LIFE

By Ann Lisle

"WHAT are you saying?" asked Phoebe. "Come, dear, don't push the tray back and lie down in that discouraged way. I know you're tired, but you've kept up like a brick so far, and what you need now is some nice hot chicken. Wait, Phoebe'll cut it for the sick lady."

"I can't eat. I've done too much today, I suppose. I'm all in," I said faintly.

Then, with a jerk, I pulled myself up and smiled at Phoebe as if to apologize for my mood.

"I've got to eat," I said grimly, "if we're going to stealth this out. Dr. Watson, your Sherlock's got to keep in good condition."

Underneath my laughing words there was grim determination. I realized that the man with Dick West the day Phoebe caught her brief glimpse of him would undoubtedly my father—Dad Lee. They'd met out in the Northwest, and nothing could be more natural than for Dick West to look up Dad Lee on his return to the city.

For a minute I was bitter against my prodigal father. I resented his association with the man who had once been Jim's partner. But now I had a new angle on it. Undoubtedly Dick West hated us.

A New Angle

Now that Jim was off on his mysterious quest and his fortunes and those of all who trusted him were tottering, I felt that nothing could be more menacing to Jim's ultimate success than Dick West's return. So instead of resenting my father's acquaintance with him, I decided to turn it to our advantage.

That is why I fell upon my hot dinner and ate it with gusto for the tonic properties I hoped it would have rather than because I wanted them. But I didn't, after Jeanie's delight when she and Pat returned and found my plates cleaned as thoroughly as if both Jack Spratt and his wife had been toasting there.

"The thing to do next," remarked Jeanie, "is to trot our Anne home and put her in bed. Just because you're a brick, dear, and don't whimper, doesn't make me forget that you've been a pretty sick girl."

"Can't I sleep here on the couch?" I asked.

"No. Pat stays here," began Phoebe, and stopped short with crimson cheeks as Virginia flashed a warning glance.

"Of course," I said in a matter-of-fact voice. "That's just like you splendidly," my laughing words there was grim determination. FOR BATHING DEVOTEES

—By Rita Stuyvesant—

THIS seashore is a paradise these torrid days and bathing outfits are consequently much in evidence.

Knitted wraps, smart for sports and moderately priced, are used for beach wear and offered in all desirable colors, striped in white or contrasting shades.

More extensive wraps come in silk and rubber taffeta. One that covers mildly from her shoulders to her ankle is cut from Harding blue, reversed with a wonderful shade of gold and tied with long ribbons at the throat, neatly pansied. There are numerous other color combinations just as fascinating.

Rubber caps and rubberized fabrics come in every conceivable shade and design, and are often adorned by a few rubber flowers, or perhaps a pert bow at the front.

For swimming and diving there is nothing better than an aviator's cap of heavy rubber, that fits the head closely and is strapped under the chin. Many girls are wearing these caps for protection, with a fancy cap over for charm.

For those who fear the sun there are bathing hats with wired brims. The soft crown forms a cap and the brim droops becomingly. Many of these are flower laden and some are tied with ribbon streamers.

The bathing sandals are delightful and show a strap buckled across the instep. These come in satin in a great variety of colors. Others prefer the high laced bathing shoe.

The other day my four-year-old brother was stung by a bee. Coming into the house, he told his father, "It's your own fault, as you were playing with it," was the reply. "I don't care," said Monroe, "I got even, I killed his brother."

Up in the Gallery

He had a staunch gallery first-nighter, and he was holding forth the virtues of his companions among the "gods."

"In the gallery," he said, "the people listen to the play intently. They don't laugh and chatter as they do down stairs. In the gallery, too, they keep their seats until the performance is over. Downstairs they put on their wraps and leave in the midst of a glorious final climax."

His listeners chuckled, but the gallery man continued:

"The theatre," he said, "is like the human body. The brains are at the top."

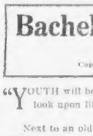
Bachelor Girl's Reflections

BY HELEN ROWLAND

Copyright, 1921, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

"YOUTH will be served—but, in matters of love, Youth is beginning to look upon life as a cafeteria, and to help itself.

Next to an old pair of slays, the hardest thing for a woman to get rid of with dignity and secrecy is a useless husband.



After a girl has been talking inspiringly for an hour or so about the "big problems" of life and all that, it is awfully mice and restful to a man, to have her suddenly stop, and begin to talk about a little thing like the way his hair waves off his forehead.

The average man, it is said, speaks in the course of a year about eleven million words—of which his wife hears only two million grunts, two million monosyllables, and several million swear words.

The worst thing about being unhappily married is not the unhappiness, but the golden chance it gives all your family and friends for saying, "I told you so!"

The insane asylums are full of men who imagine they are great geniuses; but dear me! the insane asylums couldn't possibly hold all those who fancy that they have a genius for making a rarebit, mixing home brew and tooling a woman.

A man's life must be awfully monotonous. At ten he wants to eat all the time, at twenty, to flirt all the time, at thirty he works all the time, at forty he worries all the time.

When the girls admire him, a young man takes it as a matter of course; but when a widow selects him for her attentions he thrills with the knowledge that he is being stamped with the approval of a connoisseur.

The Rhyming Optimist

By Aline Michaelis

ABOVE the verdant countryside,
And in the fields of grain and grass
And on through forests stretching wide,
The feathered songsters pass.
The farmer hears their cheerful lay from dawning until dark,
The notes of blue-bird and of jay,
The rapture of the lark.
He hears the robin and the wren and, through the noon-time hush, there comes to cheer the resting men the warble of the thrush.
And when the evening shadows creep across green vale and hill, when nature sinks to quiet sleep, he hears the whip-poor-will.
Last, blending with the night's perfume the splendor of the stars, the mocking-bird charms dusk and bloom with magic singing bars.
But in town's busy thoroughfares the song-birds will not stay; the city hears no note of theirs through all the weary day.
Alone, among the bricks and wires above the streets' mad maze, the sombre sparrow never tires of chirping through the days.
He wears a drab, unlovely coat and knows no pleasing song, and yet he trills his single note with joy the whole day long.

PUTTING ON WEIGHT

—By Brice Belden, M. D.—

IF the body is sufficiently exercised enough oxygen will be taken in to neutralize or destroy poisonous wastes, toxins, etc. This means that one so exercising can hardly develop auto-intoxication in any form.

Too little use of the muscles characterizes most of our prosperous men of mature years. The same thing is true of women in the thirties. Their very increase of weight, far from being an indication of well-being, is a sign of suboxidation. And the auto-intoxication that appears in such individuals is what determines the setting in of premature old age at forty or thereabouts.

Premature old age may actually be regarded as a succumbing to auto-intoxication.

Of course, to auto-intoxication as a cause of premature old age must be added the infectious diseases, among which is a particularly important factor, namely, chronic absorption of septic matter from apparently healthy teeth and tonsils, or from less easily recognized sources.

Infectious disease as a cause of premature old age is being successfully fought today, as witness our present mastery over diphtheria and typhoid fever. There is no reason to doubt that we shall conquer all in time, and then the expectation of life of the individual will be considerably added to.

WHAT SHALL I DO?

"THE PROPER THING" A PUZZLE TO MANY

By Beatrice Fairfax

"WHAT shall I do when a young man invites me to the theatre?"

"What shall I order when I am taken me out to dinner?"

"What shall I do when I am introduced to a man?"

Every day questions like these come whirling in by the dozen. And every day I have to pass them by, since questions of etiquette do not belong in this department. But I sometimes think that many a boy or girl finds life a dreary thing and his or her plate "lovelorn" because of a total lack of knowledge about the simple little things that to some of us are a matter of course.

Courteous Thing

There is no reason to trouble about the "proper thing" to do in certain situations—for there is always the courteous thing to do—the thing you'd like someone else to do.

Suppose, young lady, you were inviting a boy friend to go to the theatre with you, wouldn't you like to be spared pleasure at your thoughtfulness and say that she'd be glad to go, or that she was sorry but she had an engagement on that particular evening and hoped she could see you some other evening soon, even if it weren't to go to the theatre?

Suppose you are dining with another girl. Wouldn't you order simple things, with the idea of sharing a portion of this or that and so making the expense less? Wouldn't you take light, cool things in hot weather—a bit of cold meat and a salad, perhaps, with cold tea and a sweet for dessert if you could afford it? Well, why doesn't the same sane rule hold for dining with a man?

When you're introduced to another woman, don't you smile graciously, simply hold out your hand and say, amiably, "How do you do. Miss Smith?" or any other formula of pleasant greeting? Why not be as friendly and human in acknowledging an introduction to a man?

Courtesy is the keynote word. That's the thing that would do away with all this worry about questions of etiquette and the "proper thing to do." In all our social relations with other folks,

FINANCE AND BUSINESS

By B. C. Forbes

I have just had a talk with one of the most successful business men in the world, and what he says will interest every American.

* * *

Some forty years ago a humble Scottish lad started to work in London without influential friends, without capital and with no superior educational equipment. Today he controls more than a hundred publications, including the most famous journal in the world, the London Times. He has climbed to a high place in the British peerage. His influence is incomparably greater than that of any other private citizen in Britain, perhaps in the world, and, of course, he has attained great wealth.

* * *

I refer to Viscount Northcliffe.

* * *

"I am astonished and disappointed to find so much pessimism, so much unease, such nervousness, one might say, among business men. I have been here," he remarked in course of an informal chat, "when a lot of American business men were never in England and none ago they were very much impressed with the calmness they found everywhere. We were then at the height of the coal strike and industry was, of course, badly dislocated. Yet there was no excitement, no demoralization among our business men.

They had calm confidence that things would eventually right themselves.

"In America you certainly have far more reason for feeling calm and confident. You have between a third and a half of all the gold in the world, and no one is coming to you all the time. Your bank reserves are very high in comparison with the bank of England's reserves. My business, I understand, is charged very much more for the use of money here than in London. In consequence, the conditions in both countries, it isn't easy to understand why there should be so much hesitancy, diffidence and nervousness here."

* * *

When I asked Lord Northcliffe what particular quality or qualities he regarded as of supreme importance to enable a man to make his mark in business—or in any other line—he at once replied: "Persistency."

"Of course," he added, "there must always be attention to one's health. Sound health is almost indispensable to doing any big work in the world. That is basic.

"But, after allowing for proper care of one's health, persistency is the one quality which is essential to solid, sustained achievement. You must have faith in your ideals. You must have faith in your plans. This faith is necessary to keep men pegging at it through fair weather and foul, over rough roads and smooth roads. No matter what happens you must persist, persist, persist. You must keep at it, at it, at it.

"Most people don't work enough. I must confess that I don't believe people here really work as much as they pretend to. There is a great deal of talk about the amount of work done; but I think I can put more effort in it as a case of more talk than work.

"For example, I start work promptly at 8:30 every morning. Secretaries are on hand promptly at that hour, ready to attack the day's duties. We don't start about 9:30. We start at 8:30. It is this habit of beginning the day's work early that has given me so much freedom, freedom for golf and other recreation, freedom for reading, freedom for travelling, freedom to enjoy myself in addition to attending in a great deal of business.

"I find people here most unpunctual. Unpunctuality is a very bad habit. It is very discourteous. I invited a number of people to luncheon and some of them came a half an hour late. A delegation came to see me at a definitely appointed hour. I kept them waiting, and some straggling in as the proceedings were ending.

"Then, again, there is an extraordinary amount of wasting time here. You think nothing of getting half an hour or even three-quarters of an hour to be shaved—during the business part of the day. Time, too, is often taken out of the business day to have shoes shined. That means the waste of another five or ten or fifteen minutes. Lateness in keeping appointments involves still more waste of people's time.

* * *

"I might add that there is still more waste of time in the evenings as I often late into the night I see loiterers 'chewing the rag,' as you would call it. Idle, aimless, pointless talk during hours that ought to be devoted more profitably to sleep doesn't get anyone anywhere. I go to bed every night at 9:30 . I can thus get a good night's sleep and get up in time to start work on the minute of 8:30 every morning. Were I to lie in bed and not get down to work at that hour I have a great many business men make their appearance, I could not possibly give proper attention to all my various duties and to a due reasonable amount of time for relaxation and recreation."

* * *

Lord Northcliffe is a great believer in the educational value of travel. He plans to spend nine months in touring around the world. He is no blind business with pleasure. He wants particularly to investigate just what's what in the Far East. Wherever a vitally important matter crops up in any part of the world, Lord Northcliffe likes to go and conduct his own investigations on the spot. Failing this, he sends some trusted lieutenant. Moreover, he has conspicuously able representatives stationed all over the world.

He believes that much could be done to remove the danger of war if there were more international travel by the responsible citizens of each country. When men of different nationalities get to know one another they are more likely to understand one another and to be actuated by a friendly spirit. He also believes that international travel should be supplemented as fully as possible by the exchanges of international news. He would have a foreign news item or every prominent feature of his journals.

* * *

I should add that Lord Northcliffe expressed the greatest admiration for the transcendent ability of certain of our financial and business leaders.

* * *

Lord Northcliffe feels confident that the world situation is headed towards improvement. He feels that the United States has every reason for feeling optimistic rather than pessimistic. And, by the way, he is confident that the Irish trouble is nearing its end.

Stocks Irregular at Noon; Call Loans Renew at 4 1-2%; Foreign Exchange Weak

RAILS HIGHER IN NEW YORK MARKET

Price Movement Narrow and Indefinite Throughout Morning; Trading of Fair Volume

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were irregular in New York at noon in a narrow but fairly active morning. Price changes ruled small. Rails were higher but oils, steels, motors, sugars and other stocks had no definite group tendency. Call loans renewed at 4½ per cent. on the floor, but it is reported that plenty of money could be borrowed outside at 2 1-2. Foreign exchange had a fair inquiry, demand sterling opening 1 5-8 cents lower at $4.34.

Marine preferred receded 4¼ points in the first hour when the market reacted a little, but Republic Steel sold at a new 1921 low. Virginia-Carolina Chemical touched its previous low for the year.

Weakest stocks included Atlantic Gulf, Baldwin Locomotive, International Paper, Pullman, Pressed Steel Car, United Fruit and U. S. Food Products. They were down from one to two points at their lowest.

Strong issues were Allied Chemical, Locomotive, Sinclair, General Asphalt, Great Northern preferred, New York Central, Northern Pacific, Republic Steel Spring, Union Pacific, Texas & Pacific, Industrial Alcohol and National Lead. The latter sold at one to more than three points at their highest.

OPENING TREND INDECISIVE.

The market had an indefinite trend at the opening, but gains slightly exceeded losses. There was subsequent advance, but it was not sufficient to make the tone strong. Equipments improved at the opening, but the selling of some was soon recognized. Short-covering provided most of the early support given stocks today. There is said to be accumulation of certain issues by important interests, but according to gossip this is confined largely to railway shares and especially to low-priced ones. Carters and steels led the first hour advance. There is no evidence that one steel industry will be in better condition before long and that the recent improvement is the result of been the dullest of the year. As regards the outlook for steel trade the Iron Trade Review says they have been reduced in some cases to an extent indicating approximately 50% introduction in Congress of a measure to accept Secretary Harding's recommendation of immediate aid to railroads is a step toward providing them with a half billion dollars. Much of this should be spent for rails, rolling stock and equipment and help both steel and equipment manufacturers.

RESERVE RATIO HIGHER.

The reserve ratio of the Federal Reserve system made further gain during the past week, advancing from 75.6 to 75.8, and Boston's ratio had the largest percentage of the twelve banks, although it was far short of the from last week's figure. Its latest percentage is 77.8, as compared with 77.5, 75.2 and 75.6 in the weeks to July 22-6. A year ago its percentage was but 40.4 and that for the system 43.1. This improvement reflects the great change for the better which has taken place in the banking situation since last Summer. The low call rate in New York testifies to an abundance of money at that centre. Offerings exceed demand by millions, although this is a time when the demand from the interior for crop moving funds usually begins to be felt in the East. An easy money market during the balance of the Summer seem certain.

UNITED DRUG UP A FRACTION IN BOSTON

Local Market Is Dull and Narrow as Ever; Curb Leaders Soon Decline

The Boston market had a rather weak tone at the start and was irregular at its best during the morning. It was dull and had as little breadth as before this month. United Drug advanced a small fraction and its preferred issue a point. Wolverine also gained a point. United Fruit was a weak issue, opening at a decline of 1%, and afterwards showing a still larger loss. Calumet & Hecla receded 4 and point or more losses were sustained by Boston & Maine A and 1st. Mary's Lead, with Butte, were heavy, but their losses were small. Little was done in coppers and rails were neglected.

Among stocks to recede fractionally were Fairbanks A and B, American Pneumatic preferred, Swift & Co., Swift International and Edison Electric. Small gains were made by American Telephone, Massachusetts Gas and Western Electric.

CURB SOON WEAKENED.

The Curb market was irregular at the outset, but became weak within a few minutes. Trading was not unanimously this week and trading was confined to small lots. Rumors of heavy selling were foremost. At the end of an hour that stock was off 2 cents at 71 cents, Crystal Oil 1 cent at 3 cents, Lake 1 cent at 74 cents, Daddy 2 cents at 4 cents and Eureka 1 cents at 4¼ cents. Among rails were Ranier 1 cent at 5 cents and Manhattan 1 cent at 7 cents. Mutual Inad lost an opening gain of 1 cents.

BOSTON FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Pearson Oil Co., in which the Massachusetts Oil Co. is interested, has declared a dividend of 2½ per cent., payable July 30 to stock of record July 20.

According to Chicago dispatches four banks in that city which took Swift & Co.'s $25,000,000 5-year 6 per cent. notes, maturing August 15, propose a new issue of 10-year bonds bearing 7 per cent. coupons, by which the company is bargaining for a lower rate.

Swift International, Ltd., has declared the 10th with a capital of $200,000 divided into 200,000 shares of $1 par value, of the par value of $5.

A local financial publication says that while the Boston Elevated has sold at 12 cents a pound for September delivery, it is a question whether anything has been done since from the big producers.

New York trust companies, according to Professor Charles S. Hoyt, presenting statistics before the Academy of Political Science, have been dominated by the "Standard Oil" interests of the Carl Fastener Co., George T. Slade, president, and Jos. P. Tumulty, Jr., and Robert J. Robertson, Jr., of the American Agricultural Chemical Co.

Corporations for file in Massachusetts recently are: Atlantic Trust Co., Boston; Pan American Printing Corporation, 6,000 shares at without par value; Boston Trust Co., 2,000 shares of no par value; Joseph Barnard Trust Co., Boston, 1,000 shares of $100 par value; Shawmut Corporation, Boston, 10,000 shares of no par value; Sons Company, $15,000 to $50,000; Industrial Management Associates, $200,000; Collegrande Engineering Corporation, $5,000; Atlas of petroleum, $100.

By MONITOR

NEW YORK, July 29.—Thursday's stock market witnessed a moderate increase in the volume of trading, persistent steadiness in the rails and special features of weakness among the industrials. Pennsylvania Railroad worked up to 37½ and even after a small reaction closed at a net gain of nearly one point. This is a fairly large move for Pennsylvania these days.

RENEWED weakness broke out in the unquoted group as a result of the deferring of the dividend on Pressed Steel Car. Railway Steel broke over ten points. The loss was cut down by an upward reaction on short covering. General Electric was very weak and registered a new low level. The stocks were dull, although it is possible that the declaration of the regular dividend on Bethlehem B, announced after the close, may have an encouraging influence.

AN incident which showed the hopelessness of professional traders to take advantage of possibly weak situations was furnished by the heavy selling of Baldwin. Americans and Pneumatic preferred, Swift & Co., Swift International and Sloss-Sheffield stocks. Small gains were made by American Telephone, Massachusetts Gas and Western Electric preferred.

RENTAL RATES FOR CAPITAL WORKING OUT

Evans Says This Proposition Is Now Most Interesting One Facing Business Men

By C. B. EVANS.

Chicago, July 29.—The congestion of the rate of rental on capital for coming months and years is interesting to the point of fascination, perhaps more interesting than ever before in the history of modern business. Nor is it merely academic. It is a matter vital to the course of trade and the further development of civilization.

There are all sorts of quotations from 7 per cent. on good commercial loans in London to 10 per cent. on a new security issued in the United States to 8% per cent. on call money in Germany, to 5% per cent. of the United States Government.

CONFIDENCE NEEDED

Then we have the 5½ per cent. of certain Federal Reserve banks of this country and the 6% in Chicago, while at the banks here it still stands probably the most common figure. Out of this maze of rates the small ones sometime to a condition common to that of pre-war times, and the thing that will bring about will be confidence along with the purpose to resume enterprise in the future.

The question most prominent in the minds of all in this country, and the city which we have in mind, is the question of Swift & Company of this city with reference to a bond issue, relates to the possible decline in the rates from the high levels which money has occupied for some years past.

The Swift case is a typical one and it now seems probable the highly prosperous concern will be obliged to pay 7 per cent. The interest is the pressure on that concern as on all others to pay up bank loans.

A banking authority of this city expressed the opinion that the rate for money would not go very low. Still in answer to the remark that periods of great liquidation have been followed by long stretches of time in which money was cheap because there was little demand, he commented it.

The ground for his opinion naturally was the enormous need of a world of credit for all the work that must be effected and he could think that Europe would take a great deal more of our money and gold than today in the discount rate of the Bank of France and Italy. He, however, in a suggestion that Europe will not be willing to pay such high figures as have prevailed in the past.

WANT CHANCE TO LEND.

This authority illustrated it by the position of the bank of which he is an official. "If," he said, "loans were paid off in great numbers we should be looking for a chance to lend our funds and we have no objection to getting 6 per cent. money."

As against a further considerable decline in rates one may note opportunities for long pull investments in various parts of the globe. You can not buy for next month or next year, but you are devoted to a form of service not connected with commerce, but there are plenty of rotten old carts where a lot of folks have been strangled in the prejudice, that can be had at very low figures.

You can also get some former men who would make excellent head waiters in this country if property trained. The manners are already good in the main.

Remember, too, that China is waiting for capital and enterprise and is thought by many people to be the great coming country of the world in industry. Then there is Russia, it will be found after the Soviet regime is done by the time all sorts of natural resources are bidding for money, machinery and muscle. Then there are many parts of the world is waiting for its place in the sun and its turn to prosper.

The more simple and obvious objects of investment in Europe are perhaps not attractive, but there is a need of the touch of an American mind and American methods of practice. It is easy to make such investments like going across the street or to the nearest bank.

From the action of the stock market today one would say that Americans do not think much of American investments. The interest yield on many issues is very high. The promoter said there is a wide difference between a bad risk and an investment rate. The best bonds are feeling the decline in interest rates and possibly stocks may get their turn.

AGED SUFFER IN SOLDIER RELIEF QUARTERS

Weak and Feeble Parents of Veterans Crowded Into Stifling Rooms

Conditions were pitiful in the basement rooms of the Soldiers' Relief Department in the basement of the City Hall. They were crowded to suffocation and, in the crowd, were old men and women who should not have been obliged to leave their homes. They were the parents of soldiers.

Some were so weak and feeble that it would seem to be unsafe to have them on the streets without companions, even in the most favorable weather. How they manage to cross streets without being hit is a miracle, and for some of them it must be well nigh impossible to get into or out of subways or climb elevated stairs.

ON VERGE OF COLLAPSE.

In the heat of day the trip to City Hall was a terrible one for the old people. Most of them seemed to be on the verge of collapse in the stifling quarters in the hall basement.

"It's cruel to be obliged to come all the way from home on a day like this," said one elderly woman, "but God knows most of us are in dire need of the little money we get."

On the last four days of every month the soldiers' relief payments are made and about a thousand cases are attended to on each day. Five clerks are detailed to do the work and they are rapid workers, patient and kindly and with a keen appreciation of the delicate nature of their tasks.

NO OTHER PLACE.

On cool days conditions are not so bad and there seems to be no other place in the hall for this great emergency work that has fallen upon the department.

This situation was explained to some visitors this morning, but they all indorsed the sentiment of one who said: "It's a darned shame, just the same."

LIGGETT FUNDS DISCUSSED BY TRUSTEES

May Be Weeks Before Definite Figures Can Be Reported, They State

Working to straighten out his personal financial difficulties, Louis K. Liggett has taken up the task of unwinding the affairs due to the late market slump which wiped out more than $5,000,000 of his credit.

Frank W. Rentschler, Frederick C. Dumaine and Neal Rantoul, the three trustees in whose hands Mr. Liggett placed his personal financial affairs, have held a preliminary conference at Remick's office. It was stated that might be weeks before definite figures could be given out.

Mr. Liggett's friends are firm in their belief that his financial troubles are only temporary. The "Street" believes Mr. Liggett will "make good" in his present straits, basing this belief partly on his previous achievement of building up the $52,000,000 drug concern.

It was reiterated that Mr. Liggett would continue to head the United Drug Company.

CHILDREN ESCAPE DEATH FROM WILD FIRETRUCK

Two small children, too frightened to move, narrowly escaped violent death when a fire truck ran wild at Main and Harvard streets, South Medford, ran over a sidewalk and crashed into the plate glass window of a store. The children were released by the careening machine by a few inches. Three firemen in the car were slightly bruised. Damage to the machine is estimated at $100.

News of Motion Picture World

By FRIEDA DAVIS

THOMAS MEIGHAN will brook no half-way measures. When he plays a "type" role in a picture, the audience may rest assured that whatever he does is "being done this season" by the best of character he portrays. When it came to playing a convict at Sing Sing prison, Sing Sing itself and a staff of "guests" and lookers formed the back ground and the prisoners enacted Tommy in the proper way to be a crook.

When the time came to play the pickpocket in "White and Unmarried," Meighan and his director, Tom Forman, had a point to look up "On King of Dips," who was at the very time concerning in a New York prison. When he finished his lesson Tommy declared privately that pickpocketing wasn't a profession but an art.

Most such, he learned, carry their money in their left trousers pocket. Tommy immediately transferred his bankroll to the right side. While he was talking with the man the latter coolly handed him his watch. "You must want to lose the time piece," he remarked. "Why don't you put the chain through your vest button-hole. Then it wouldn't be so easy to get."

If one would keep his pocketbook from a pickpocket, he explained, the best place to keep it is in the inside vest pocket. This place is the hardest to reach, but it can be done.

Pickpockets work in gangs, known as "gun mobs," and have a set of signals that make, accordingly to him, the pessimistic system in the army and navy look limited in use of words. One member of a gang does the "jamming." That is, goes over the victim, locating his money and valuables. Then he signals his pals, who do the work.

"We never reach into a pocket," he went on in the dauntfounded Tommy, "we gently lift the lining out until the money appears and then the fingers do the rest."

Meighan took a few practical lessons from him and then he and Forman left, grasping their pockets like grim death, but certain that "White and Unmarried" would be technically correct.

KIPLING HIGHLY PLEASED.

IT'S not always easy to please the author of a film story. Invariably there are changes or remarks to make about the "book director or lady author has put a good story." When Channing Pollock was lavish with his praise of the way he has play, "The Sign on the Door," was filmed, it created quite a ripple in the motion picture circles.

Last week the Pathe production of Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy," was given a private showing in London for the author. Mr. Kipling was enthusiastic over the picture, and especially pleased with the performance of Virginia Pales, whom he declared as a "find" in this world of inconsequential players.

HITCHENS WITH LASKY.

HAVING annexed a great many of the best writers of this country to the ranks of Famous Players-Lasky alliance, the company is now signing up many of the well-known writers of England to supply the material for the pictures made in their London studios.

Robert Hichens, of "The Garden of Allah," "Bella Donna," and "Harlequin and Pantaloon," is the latest to put his name on the dotted line. He has been in conference with the heads over there making plans for the first picture he has had remarkable good luck with the stories he has already had filmed. These however, were adapted from plays or novels. First Famous Players-Lasky played "Bella Donna," which is one of the best pictures of the list of successful productions. Then Elsie Ferguson made a great success of "Barbary Sheep." Norma Talmadge is making plans for him "The Garden of Allah."

TRAVELERS RETURNING.

ALICE BRADY, who has been abroad for several weeks accompanied with her husband, James Crane, returned on the same boat with Mary Pickford. Miss Brady has been practically resting for the past year and will be taken up again within a few months.

Another traveler who is getting ready to come to this country is Mary Miles Minter, who has been the delight of Europe on her refreshing and sensational interviews. Miss Minter ran into Elsie Janis while she was in Paris and the two came fast friends. While Miss Janis was in Paris a wedding was arranged between Miss Minter and Mr. Mayhew.

ICE CREAM CONE PRICES LOWER, SAYS BOARD

Chairman Hultman of State Commission Reports Sweeping Reductions in Boston

The children's boycott against high-priced ice cream cones has resulted in a general reduction in prices throughout greater Boston, according to Joseph C. Hultman, chairman of the Commission on Necessaries of Life.

"Dozens of cream cones are now selling for 4 cents and 5 cents each throughout the Metropolitan Boston district, and in a few places the prices have gone down to 3 cents each," he said.

One of the best to lower the price to 3 cents each is Thomas Cheney, owner of a manufacturing plant at Nahanna Corner, Dorchester. He has also reduced the price of ice cream sodas that were selling for 10 cents to 7 cents. Cheney is true of college men. Large glasses filled with cream or soda drinks now sell for 5 cents.

Means Slavery in Hawaii

Importation of Coolie Labor There Would "Tilt Lid" For Flood of Yellow Races Onto American Soil.

The Committee on Immigration of the National House of Representatives has reported a most extraordinary resolution in favor of permitting the planters of Hawaii to import 50,000 Chinese coolies to work as bonded slaves on the sugar plantations for five years, and then, if desirable, to be deported in favor of another batch of coolies.

Congressman Nolan of California denounced the scheme and asked: "What are you going to do if one of these bonded coolies leaves a plantation before the five-year period has expired?"

To which Congressman Raker replied: "Arrest him and send him back."

Then answered Nolan, "You are proposing to chain him to the job."

"Surely," replied Raker.

We have thought that the 14th Amendment put an end to slavery in American territory. Is it possible that we have such little aptitude for liberty that even after the tremendous sacrifices of the Civil War we have not been able to make American territory so instinct with liberty as to confer it upon the slave by mere contact with our ground? A simple decision of an inferior court on nisi prius in Great Britain accomplished this for England several generations ago.

But there is another ground also on which this scheme should be rejected. As Congressman Nolan has well said: "We do not want any scheme which would permit the tilting of the lid excluding Asiatic immigration whether it deals with Chinese, Japanese or any other Asiatic."

Indeed, we do not. We are determined as a people not to permit the slightest breach in the retaining wall which holds out from our territory the great flood of humanity surging against it and eager to overflow our Elysian fields.

It is not that we hold these Asiatics in contempt. It is not that we disparage their color, their race, their character or culture, or anything which is of them. But we are bound to recognize inexorable economic facts with respect to them. We are bound to recognize the fact that there are something like a thousand million of them; that they are generally illiterate and have a low standard of living, and have a wonderful and fearful prolificacy; that their culture, traditions and all the essential characteristics of them and their blood itself is unassimilable with ours, and their institutions are not homogeneous.

To admit them freely is a deliberate act of suicide on our part. We do not say that they would wilfully exterminate us, but by the law of economics and physiology, they would, under nature herself, inevitably and unavoidably exterminate us. The keeping of the retaining wall intact from even the slightest breach is an act of self-preservation and means no reflection upon any race or creed or condition in Asia. We insist upon it even though we entertain the highest respect for those we would exclude, and even though as in the case of the people of India and China, we sympathize with their struggles for freedom from foreign domination and their desire to develop a great, prosperous, homogeneous, enlightened nation.

The men who would let in the flood from Asia would sign the death knell of American civilization, and our non-contiguous territories are entitled to as much protection as our contiguous territories. Our American labor organizations are profoundly right in their steady opposition to this foolish, short-sighted and unpatriotic scheme.

Weeks on Disarmament

It is gratifying to know that Secretary Weeks is vigorously trying to prevent the greatest folly of the ages from rendering this country defenceless at a period in human affairs when the world's morals are the lowest, its faith is the weakest, and the power of force over virtue greater than at any period in the last three generations.

We agree with every word that Secretary Weeks said recently concerning the danger of disarmament until the other nations disarm.

We wish, however, that he had been a little clearer as to the relative extent to which he thinks we ought to disarm. In pointing out dangers, he clearly had in mind Japan, and we may safely assume that he meant that we should not reduce our power below the power of Japan.

But he went out of his way to say that the possibility of conflict with Great Britain was unthinkable, and this leads us to the question which is much more important than the question of Japan. What does he mean by saying that a contest with Great Britain is unthinkable? He referred to the unguarded frontier between Canada and the United States without conflict for a hundred years. As a man of some military training, he ought to know that this signifies nothing at all.

If he means when he says that a contest with Great Britain is unthinkable that it is dreadful to think about it, we agree with him, but if he means that we ought not to contemplate its possibility when we are considering possible dangers for the national defence, then his statement breaches the plainest precepts of prudence.

Which Plan Pays Best?

The question is not whether you want to pay a sales tax or not.

You pay sales taxes now, every day of your life. You always have paid sales taxes and you always will, as long as taxes are levied and men buy and sell.

The only question is whether you want to pay taxes, as you do now, with about 23 per cent. of middlemen's added profits and collection expenses, or whether you want to pay taxes with the middlemen's profits eliminated and the collection cost reduced to about 3 per cent.

That's the only question.

Do you folks, who consume the production of the country, and so pay the taxes of the country, want to pay $1,000,000,000 each year to private profiteers, who add their amount to the total as they pass the taxes along, or would you rather pay $150,000,000, and know what you were paying to a penny?

Results to Date of Prohibition

"What Has Prohibition Actually Accomplished to Date?" asked William Randolph Hearst editorially in the Boston American of July 2. One hundred dollars will be paid for the best answer of not more than 150 words.

Spread Moonshining.

Editor Boston American:

Prohibition has caused one of the worst blights, moonshining, for years confined to the mountainous section of the South, to spread all over the country, from Maine to California and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

It has brought law into more disrespect and made more scheming criminals of honest ment than all other forces of depravity in the country today. It has snatched from the toilers, the builders of the nation, without whose labor the country would die and the parasites (conspicuous in the dry movement) perish, beer, real not near, the only real reviving, life-giving, healthful, palatable beverage, after a day of drudgery, especially during these torrid spells.

It has changed the country from the liveliest to the deadest and its toilers to the most discontented and gloomiest set of working people on the face of the earth.

BEAUTY AND CHARACTER

Although a person may be unattractive in a physical or facial way, yet a far greater attraction may exist.

The person whose character is right, whose disposition is pleasing, who is thoughtful and kind and sincere, may have more true friends than the one whose claims for friendship are mere physical charms.

Sometimes girls with rather ugly faces become despondent, reaching the stage where they feel that no one in particular cares for them, and it will never be possible to gain many friends.

In this mood the girls become careless in dress and sometimes as careless in conduct, believing that no matter how nice they may try to be their homely exterior may stand in the way of associates they desire.

But it is a mistaken attitude and a false deduction.

A girl cannot afford to be lax in any way in her conduct.

There are many persons to whom the fact that the girl is so above reproach is an incentive to know the girl better, and without realizing it a far greater friendship may result from a mutual admiration of mental and heart qualities—a friendship which is lasting.

Cake King of Near East

CHISINAU, Bessarabia, July 29. —If your wandering across Europe should lead you to Bessarabia—this wonderful grain and fruit province of the new Rumania, which in former days was to Russia what the Cote d'Azur is to France—you will inevitably halt in Chisinau, its capital, and as equally inevitably present yourself "chez Manicoff."

There is only one Manicoff, and his delectable confections cause even those of Zurich to be found wanting. On warm days, selecting your cakes from the bewildering assortment under the glass cases, you will retire to the veranda where oleanders flourish and vine tendrils wander over the pillars; but if cold winds blow across the great plateau from the Russian side of the Dniester you had better drink your glass of tea a la Russe or coffee after the Vienna fashion, with whipped cream floating on the top, in the inner room with its sticky velvet sofas and rickety bamboo tables. Or, best of all, if you are known to Manicoff himself, he will invite you to his house, across the courtyard, where his "laboratory," as he terms the bakery that has made his house famous, is hard at work.

Manicoff himself is short and plump, and the gentle curves of his well-filled waistcoat would seem to indicate a prosperous career. He is the cake king of the Near East.

MT. EVEREST EXPEDITION NEARING SLOPES

By Colonel Howard Bury,

Leader of Mt. Everest Expedition

Special Cable Dispatch. Copyrighted and furnished by the Mount Everest Committee.

The following is the sixth of Colonel Howard Bury's dispatches on the Mount Everest expedition and carries the narrative to Tingri Dzong, which doubtless is within fifty miles of the point shown on the maps under that name, which maps, according to Colonel Bury, are greatly inaccurate. Maps which members of the expedition probably are preparing as a result of their survey of 25,000 square miles of hitherto unchartered territory must be available before the world will know just where the expedition is located.

Reconnoitring parties sent out from Tingri Dzong, which has been established as a base evidently, have not met with success, as Colonel Bury refers to the northern and northwestern approaches as "appalling." But the party is probably awaiting more information concerning them before comparing them with the known approaches on the south and east. The party decided to take this long and circuitous route almost around Everest on reports from natives that easier approaches lay to the north and northwest and also by the fact that this route was untried.

Colonel Bury's note of disappointment is not too discouraging to those who have studied what little is known of the territory around Everest, because it was expected that unless the expedition discovered some easily accessible pass its most difficult time lay ahead. The fact that there has been no more illness owing to the altitudes and that the transport seemingly is holding up will be looked upon as of good omen.

TINGRI DZONG, Tibet, July, via Simla, India, July 27.—Details of our journey along the valley of the Dhong to Tingri Dzong follow:

After leaving our sandswept camp we returned into the valley of the Dhong Chu River, flowing from the west in considerable volume. Major Morshead and his surveyors were kept extremely busy on route climbing hills on either side of the valley and taking observations, as this was all new country through which we were passing, never surveyed before. He and his surveyors have mapped out some 25,000 square miles of new country.

The views from some of the hills were wonderful, extending from beyond Chomophari, over 120 miles away, to the east and embracing practically all the high snow peaks from Chomophari to Gosainthan, a distance of some 250 miles. In the centre Everest stood out all by itself, a wonderfully shaped peak, towering several thousand feet above its neighbors and entirely without a rival.

Carry Heavy Loads

The transport consisted only of donkeys, many very small, but quite accustomed to carry heavy loads for two days. The march up the valley of the Dhong brought us to Kishong, a prettyy village surrounded by willows and sea buckthorn. On the way I turned off to visit a small side valley which, though more than fifteen thousand feet above the sea, was a mass of wild roses and juniper.

The roses were cream colored and the sweetest scented. Every bush was covered with hundreds of creamy white flowers. Here and there patches of soft green grass and of bubbling springs were unexpected delights of this somewhat arid country. At one place I passed five large white chortens (pyramidal structure of solid stone masonry), under which I was told an exceptionally malignant devil was buried, the centre chorten being over his body and the four side ones keeping his hands and feet underground, thus preventing him from working any harm.

At Headquarters

From Kishong to Shekai Dzong was a short march. At the latter place, the headquarters of the district, two longpeaks loomed, one lay and the other ecclesiastical. There is also a large monastery with 400 monks. The views from Shekai Dzong were quite imposing, as it stands on a conical rocky hill like an enlarged Saint Michael's mount. The actual town is on the base of the hill, but the monastery, consisting of numerous buildings and narrow streets, is literally perched half-way up the hillside and connected by walls and towers with the fort built still higher up.

That again is connected by turretted walls with a curious gothic like structure on the summit where incense is freely offered to the deities. Altogether it is a most remarkable place.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

RELIEF WORK OF QUAKERS AMONG THE GERMANS

By Joseph Irwin France,

U. S. Senator from Maryland.

(Copyright, 1921, by the Baltimore Sun.)

Senator France entered Russia on June 20 and is now on his way out from Moscow. On his way to Russia he went from England, via Antwerp, through Belgium and Holland, through Essen into Germany, and from Berlin he sent by mail several articles dealing with German-Russian relations and the conditions which affect American trade. Senator France is the first American to gain entrance into Russia in many months. The fifth of his articles from Berlin follows. He will write his story of Russian conditions when he get s out.

BERLIN, June 25 (By Mail).—The principal objection to a rapid run through a large country is that one sees only a few high spots. In Berlin, until today, I had seen principally government officials, publicists, bankers, manufacturers, merchants—and Americans, once more swarming about this end of Unter den Linden and reviving the venerable jest of the American who sees a German dining in the luxurious Adlon and refries, "What? Do they let foreigners into this hotel?"

Today, however, I devoted largely to talking with local agents of the American Friends' Committee and seeing the work which the "Kwaeker" are doing for the next generation in Germany. My interest was manifold. I wished to see just what is the service to which Germans refer in such grateful terms, extremely pleasant to the ears of an American; I wished to see the other extreme from the groaning tables along the boulevards; I wished to observe whether the poor of 1921 are poorer than those of 1914; finally, aware that the American Friends have already started distributing medical supplies from Moscow, I wished to examine the efficiency of the Friends' large-scale work in Germany.

War's Blight Seen

In my brief study of Germany today I am trying to avoid sentiment, to eliminate natural prejudice. If I see Germany suffering I recall that England and France —and America also—are suffering.

There were many cases of rickets and arthritis and malnutrition in the babies' hospital I visited today. By patient nursing, inestimably aided by the Quaker food supply, the German government is attempting to give health to children who never had it; mothers who were underfed had given their offspring a dismal start in an dismal world. An infant crying for milk had been given a thin soup, thickened with a poor grade of flour; it is not hard to see why the bones were frail.

I cannot say how high is the percentage of babies in really desperate condition, nor how it compares with the number in France, say, or in the New York slums in peace time (but these children are not from the slums; inquiry showed their fathers to be artisans and little merchants). The only comparison was afforded by the nurses and staff; they cited 50 per cent. more cases than before the war.

Nearly 1,000,000 Fed

So much for the babies. The Friends' principal work, perhaps, is the large-scale distribution of one good meal a day to children of school age, and apprentice age, the latter group, of course, having been 10 or 12 when the famine period started. When one learns that 950,000 are being fed in Germany by this American organization he grasps the immensity of the task.

Of Miss Caroline Norment of Baltimore, who, with Alfred Scattergood of Philadelphia (a name so appropriate that at first thought it was a sort of slogan), took us about, I asked an opinion as to the children's future. She was extremely grave.

"Probably it won't be necessary for the society to carry on for more than another year," she said. "The Germans will surely take over the work by that time, and as food prices fall the job of nourishing the new generation will become easier. Even clothing, after next Winter, may become more available. Our fear is that the cost of the war, and the peace, will permanently cripple it; that everything except goods-and-money production, so that all means can go toward paying the cost. Will not education, then, suffer?"

I confess there is ground for her anxiety. There is the cultural as well as the physical result of the war, but its extent is hardly determinable now. The physical effect on the new generation is appreciable to anyone who chooses to make even the short tour that I did of a few feeding places in this one city. There are more than 6,000 other feeding places in 1,200 other cities and towns throughout Germany, and my tour today was probably fairly typical of all.
